He becomes enraged with everyone even at the slightest transgression; he that would give me shelter should not anger me." As no one took notice of him (read with B. °n nādrīyate), I invited him. Sometimes he would eat food sufficient for many thousand persons, sometimes very little, and [sometimes] he would not return home; he would laugh and weep without any visible reason; no one at that time was equal to him in years; [one day] he burnt all the beds and coverlets and all the well-adorned damsels, and then went out; then he asked for rice-milk (pāyasa); having previously caused every kind of food and drink to be kept ready, I caused hot rice-milk to be brought; having eaten some, he ordered me to smear my limbs with the remnant, which I did; then he smeared Rukmiṇī, and causing her to be yoked to a chariot, he, ascending that chariot, set out of my house striking her with the hook, and proceeded along the high road; the *Duśarha*s became angry; as Rukmiṇī tottered, he struck her [with the whip]; then he leapt down from the chariot and fled towards the south on foot, followed by us. Then he became gratified because I had subdued my anger, and said: "As long as gods and men will continue to entertain a liking for food, so long will everyone among them cherish the same liking for thee; so long as there will be righteous [men] (puṇyāḥ) in the worlds, so long will thy fame last; agreeable thou shalt be to all persons; whatever articles of thine have been broken or burnt or destroyed, thou shalt see restored or even better; thou wilt have no fear of death through such parts of thy body as have been smeared [with the rice-milk]; thou ought to have smeared also the soles of thy feet." I saw my body endued with great beauty and splendour. He also blessed Rukmiṇī, saying: "Thou shalt be the foremost of women in fame, etc., free from decrepitude or diseases or loss of complexion, possessed of a fragrant odour, the foremost of Kṛṣṇa's 60,000 wives, and [after death] thou shalt dwell in the same world as Kṛṣṇa." Having recommended me to be always thus disposed towards the brahmins, he disappeared. I and Rukmiṇī took the vow of always satisfying the brahmins. Having entered our house, I saw that everything which D. had broken or burnt had become renewed. From that day forth I have always worshipped the brahmins: XIII, 160, 7416, 7449.—§ 773 (Ānuśāsanik.): XIII, 161, 7458 (^a ṇā prasādat).—§ 773d (Īva): XIII, 161, 7494 (is a form of Īva).—§ 789 (Putradarṣanap.): XV, 30, 820 (repetition from § 131).—§ 793 (Mausalap.): XVI, 4, †123 (had made Kṛṣṇa invulnerable except on the soles of the feet, cf. § 773c). [Duryodhana-yajña(h)] ("the sacrifice of Duryodhana"). § 516 (Ghoshay., cf. Karnaḍigv.): Karna proposed to Duryodhana that he should celebrate a rājasūya sacrifice like Yudhisṭhira. But as the purohita told him that so long as Yudhisṭhira and Dhṛtarāshṭra were living he could not undertake the rājasūya sacrifice, and advised him to cause the tributary kings to pay him tribute in gold, and with that gold to make a plough, and to plough the sacrificial compound with it, and then to perform a Vaiśṇava sacrifice that nobody had performed before save the ancient Viṣṇu (v. 15292, cf. v. 15329 foll.) which was equal to the rājasūya, this plan was agreed upon. Duryodhana appointed persons to their respective tasks, and desired all the artisans to construct the plough, etc. (III, 255). When Vidura had announced to Dhṛtarāshṭra that the preparations had been made, messengers were dispatched to invite the princes and the brahmanas. Duḥśasana ordered one messenger to invite the Pāṇḍavas, but Yudhisṭhira replied that they could not come before the completion of the thirteenth year. Bhīma threatened; the other Pāṇḍavas said nothing unpleasant. Vidura was charged with the distribution of food to the guests. After the completion of the sacrifice, all the kings having been dismissed, Duryodhana, with his brothers and Karna and Çakuni, entered Hāstinapura (III, 256). Duryodhana was praised by most of the citizens, and his friends compared him to Yayāti, Nahusha, Mandhātṛ, and Bharata, who had gone to heaven after celebrating this sacrifice (v. 15329 foll., cf. v. 15292). Karna said that when Duryodhana had slain the Pāṇḍavas in battle and completed the rājasūya sacrifice he would once more honour him thus, and promised that until he had slain Arjuna he would not allow his feet to be washed, nor taste meat, and he would observe the Āsura vow (i.e. not to drink intoxicating liquors, Nil.), and never refuse to give to whoever might solicit him.

Dvaitavanapraveça(h) ("proceeding to the Dvaitavana forest") (cf. Arjunābhigamanap.). § 322: The Pāṇḍavas, with Kṛṣṇa and Dharmya, on costly chariots yoked with excellent steeds, went into the forest, distributing nishkas of gold, etc., to brahmins versed in Çikṣā (i.e., vedic pronunciation, PCR., or "grammar and the other vedāṅgas," Nil.), akṣhara (= vedic orthography, PCR.; = veda, Nil.), and mantras (= praṇava, i.e. the syllable om, Nil.), and followed by twenty attendants with bows, etc., while Indrasena, with the princess's (i.e. Subhadra's, Nil.) clothes and ornaments and the nurses and maidservants, followed in a chariot. The citizens walked round Yudhiṣṭhira, and the brahmins and principal men of Kurujāṅgala of all castes saluted him and blamed the Dhārtarāṣṭras, etc. Arjuna told them that after their exile they would take away the good name of their enemies, and asked them to beseech the ascetics for their good. At last they returned to their respective abodes (III, 23). After a conference between Yudhiṣṭhira and Arjuna, they resolved upon dwelling for these twelve years at the sacred lake Dvaitavana (see BR.) in the forest of the same name (copious description), on the banks of Bhogavati (i.e. Sarasvatī, Nil.), surrounded by many brahmins, and saluted by hosts of Cāraṇas and Siddhas, who came to see Yudhiṣṭhira (III, 24).—§ 323: While they were dwelling there, Dharmya performed their iṣṭis (i.e. darça-paurṇamāsa, etc., Nil.) and offerings to the Pitṛs, etc. Once the old ṛṣi Markaṇḍeya came to them and smiled, recollecting Rāma Dāçarathi, whom he had seen on the top of the Rāhyamūka, and comforted Yudhiṣṭhira by reminding him of the aforesaid Rāma, Nabhāga, Bhagīratha, etc., and Alarka, the king of the Kāçis and the Karuṣhas (b), the seven ṛṣis, who had followed the ordinance of the Creator and therefore blazed in the firmament; "so you will regain prosperity." Then he went away in a northerly direction (III, 25).—§ 324: The Dvaitavana forest becoming filled with brahmins (Bhṛgu, Āṅgīrasas, Vasiṣṭhas, Kāçyapas, Agastyas, Atreyas, etc.), and always resounding with Vedic recitations, mingling with the twangs of the bows of the Pāṇḍavas, a beautiful union of brahman and kṣatriya customs was produced. Therefore one evening the ṛṣi Baka Dālbhya represented to Yudhiṣṭhira that the kṣatriya should always consult with a brahman, as did the Asura king Bali, the son of Virocana, who went to no other tīrtha than the brahmins, and then had all his wishes gratified, but who met with destruction when he began to act unjustly towards them. Then all those brahmins, Dvaipāyana, Nārada, Jāmadagnya, etc. (enumeration) (a), praised Yudhiṣṭhira (III, 26).

Dyūtaparvan ("the section relating to the gambling," the 28th of the minor parvans of the Mbhr.). § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 319.—§ 293: When Vyāsa with his disciples came to take leave, Yudhishtira asked him about the celestial, atmospherical, and terrestrial portents which, according to the statement of Nārada, had happened at the rājasūya. Vyāsa said that in thirteen years they would be fulfilled by the destruction of all the kshatriyas, and that Yudhishtira would that very night see Śiva gazing incessantly towards the direction presided over by the king of the Pitrs (i.e. the south). Then Vyāsa with his disciples proceeded towards Kailāsa. Yudhishtira resolved to die in order that he might not be the cause of the destruction of the kshatriyas, but called back from his intention by Phalguna (i.e. Arjuna), he took upon him the vow not to speak a harsh word to his brothers or to any of the kings. Then, having gratified the Pitrs and gods, he entered his own palace, accompanied by his ministers (II, 46).—§ 294: Duryodhana, accompanied by Çakuni, by and by beheld all the sabhā; he mistook a piece of crystal for water and drew off his clothes, mistook a lake for land and fell in, etc., and was laughed at by Bhīma, Arjuna, the twins, and the menials of the palace. Filled with wrath and jealousy he became pale, and returned to Hastinapura, together with Çakuni (II, 47). Çakuni told him to ask Yudhishtira, who was very fond of gambling and did not know how to play, to play at dice; then he (Çakuni), who was skilled in dice, would win his kingdom and prosperity for Duryodhana (II, 48). Çakuni told Dhrtarāshtra that Duryodhana was pale and depressed; Dhrtarāshtra asked Duryodhana the cause; Duryodhana told him that Yudhishtira supported 88,000 śātakas, giving to each of them thirty slave-girls; that 10,000 other brahmins daily ate at his palace the best food off golden plates; that the king of Kāmbhoja sent to him innumerable skins, etc.; that the Ocean brought the Vārūṇa nectar to him in a vessel of copper, as the celestial wives (amarastriyaḥ) to Indra; that Vāsudeva, having brought an excellent conch, bathed him with sea-water brought in 1,000 jars of gold, etc., from the eastern, southern, and western oceans; that the conches, which were blown when 100,000 brahmins were fed, could be heard there almost incessantly, etc. Duryodhana proposed to Dhrtarāshtra to invite Yudhishtira to a game at dice with Çakuni, and prevented him from consulting Vidura till he had had a sabhā built. Then he ordered Vidura, who dissuaded him in vain, to invite Yudhishtira. Vidura in great sorrow went to Bhīshma (II, 49).—At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiçampayana related that Dhrtarāshtra, having ascertained the opinion of Vidura (b), sought to bring Duryodhana back from his purpose to play at dice; but Duryodhana would not give way, relating that the Nipās, Citrakas, the Kaukuras, the Kāraskaras, and the Lohajanghas were like bondsmen in the house of Yudhishtira, and that Bhīma, Arjuna, and Draupadi had laughed at his mistake regarding the crystal, etc. (II, 50).—§ 295: Duryodhana enumerated to Dhrtarāshtra the articles brought as tribute from various peoples to Yudhishtira. Yājñaseni (i.e. Kṛṣṇā) daily (during the rājasūya) took care that everybody, including the deformed and the dwarfs, had eaten before she herself took her meal. Only two peoples did not pay tribute to Yudhishtira, the Pāñḍalas, in consequence of their relationship by marriage, and the Andhakas - Vṛkṣṇis, in consequence of their friendship (II, 52).—§ 296: Duryodhana continued to enumerate kings, etc., who waited upon Yudhishtira at the rājasūya. The Ocean brought that Vārūṇa conch (çaiḱyam, "in a sling," PCR., i.e. in a strap, cf. BR.), which Viçvakarma had constructed with 1,000 nishkas, and which Prajāpati had in a former kalpa presented to Indra; with that conch Kṛṣṇa anointed (abhihiḱtaḥ) Yudhishtira. When the conches were blown, those among the kings who were weak fell down, and Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Satyaki, the Pāṇḍavas, and Keçava laughed; then Bibhatu (= Arjuna) gave to the principal brahmins 500 bullocks with horns plated with gold, and Yudhishtira obtained, like Horiçandra, such prosperity that he surpassed Rantideva, Nābhaga, Yauvanāçva, Manu, Prthu Vainya, Bhagrattha, Yayāti, and Nahusha (II, 53).—§ 297: Continuation of the conversation between Dhrtarāshtra and Duryodhana (II, 54, 55).—§ 298: As Çakuni recommended the match of dice and praised his own dexterity in gambling, and Duryodhana spoke reprovingly of Vidura on account of his fondness for the Pāṇḍavas, etc., Dhrtarāshtra reluctantly caused the sabhā (called Toraṇasphāṭikā) to be built, with 1,000 columns adorned with gold and lapis lazuli, a croça in length and breadth, and then ordered Vidura to bring Yudhishtira and his brothers (II, 56, 57). Vidura arrived at the palace of Yudhishtira and invited him. Yudhishtira, having learned that he should have to play with Çakuni, Vivimçati, Citrāsena, Satyavata, Purumitra, and Jaya, "the most desperate and terrible gamblers, always depending upon deceit," was unwilling to come; but as he had made the vow never to refuse when challenged, he set out for Hastinapura the next day with his relatives, Draupadi, brahmins, etc., riding on the chariot taken charge of (so BR.) by Bāhlika, and when he had arrived he saluted Bhīshma, Droṇa, Karṇa, Kṛpa, Açvatthāman, Somadatta, Duryodhana, Çalya, Saubala, Duḥçāsana, Jayadratha, etc., and Gāndhārī and Dhrtarāshtra (II, 58). Çakuni exhorted Yudhishtira to gamble. Yudhishtira quoted Asita Devala (b), but he was obliged to assent; Duryodhana said that he himself would supply jewels, etc., and that it was for him that Çakuni would play (II, 59). The play began, the stake being a wreath of pearls, which Çakuni won (II, 60). Çakuni then won from Yudhishtira his treasury, slave-girls, serving-men, elephants, chariots, the Gandharva horses which Citrāsena had given to Arjuna, his warriors, and nidhis (II, 61). Vidura, addressing Dhrtarāshtra, quoted the words of Kāvya, and reminded him that among the Bhojas they had abandoned an unworthy (asamañjasaṃ) son; the Andhakas, Yādavas, and Bhojas had abandoned Kaṃsa, and when he had been slain by Kṛṣṇa the whole tribe became glad for a hundred years; "[likewise] let Arjuna slay this Suyodhana at thy command"; he quoted what Kāvya said to the Asuras in order to induce them to abandon Jambha, and related how a king from greediness after gold killed some gold-vomiting fowls that dwelt in his house, and so destroyed both his present and future wealth (II, 62). Vidura warned against the gambling, and suggested to Dhrtarāshtra rather to win the Pāṇḍavas than their wealth, and to let Çakuni, the hill-king (Pāravatyāḥ), return whence he came (II, 63). Duryodhana blamed Vidura for his partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas, and said that he would only follow the advice of his own intellect.

Vidura complained of the ingratitude of kings and their fondness of flattery (II, 64). Yudhishtira lost his wealth, kine, horses, goats, and sheep, "from Parna to the eastern bank of the Sindhu," his city, country, lands, and the wealth of all dwelling therein, except that of the brahmins, and all those persons themselves except the brahmins, the ear-rings and nishkas and other ornaments of the princes who were present, then Nakula, Sahadeva, Arjuna, Bhima, himself, and Draupadi; now Bhisma, Drona, Kṛpa, Vidura, etc., all gave way to grief, but Dhṛtarāshtra, Karna, Duḥśāsana, etc., were glad (II, 65).—§ 299: Duryodhana ordered Kshatṛ (i.e. Vidura) to bring hither Draupadi to sweep the chambers and stay with the servant maids; Vidura declared that having lost himself, Yudhishtira could not lawfully stake Draupadi, and said: "A goat had once swallowed a knife, and when it was pierced by it the hunter placed the head of the animal on the ground, and when drawing the knife out he tore its throat frightfully; therefore do not swallow the wealth of the Pāṇḍavas" (II, 66). Then Duryodhana ordered the pratikāmin (a sūta) to bring Draupadi; she ordered him to ask Yudhishtira whether he had lost himself or her first; as Yudhishtira said nothing, Duryodhana ordered that Draupadi should come and put her question in the assembly; she sent the sūta back to the assembly saying that she would do what aged and virtuous persons would tell her; all sat without uttering a word; but Yudhishtira sent a trusted messenger to Draupadi, directing that, although in consequence of her season having come she was attired in one piece of cloth only, she should come before her father-in-law weeping bitterly. Duryodhana again ordered the pratikāmin to bring her, and as he seemed irresolute, he asked Duḥśāsana to do so. As she would flee to the ladies' household, Duḥśāsana dragged her in by her hair, while she was praying to Kṛṣṇa and Jishnu (i.e. Arjuna), who were Nārāyaṇa and Nara, and blaming Drona, Bhisma, Vidura, etc., for looking silently on this crime. As she was casting a glance upon her enraged lords, Duḥśāsana, dragging her still more forcibly, addressed her, "Slave! slave!" and laughed aloud, applauded by Karna, Çakuni, and Duryodhana, while all the others were filled with sorrow. Bhisma declared himself to be unable to decide the question she had put. As she then asked the others present to decide it, Duḥśāsana spoke many harsh words, and Bhima, looking at Yudhishtira, gave way to wrath (II, 67). Bhima blamed Yudhishtira, and ordered Sahadeva to bring fire, as he wanted to burn the hands of Yudhishtira, but Arjuna appeased him. Vikarna repeatedly appealed to those present to decide the question, and as they did not say one word, he declared that as Yudhishtira must be regarded as of no authority, because he had shown himself addicted to the vice of gambling, etc., he regarded Draupadi as not won. All applauded him, except Karna, who maintained that she had been justly won, and as, contrary to the ordinance of the gods that a woman should have only one husband, she had five husbands, there was no impropriety in dragging her to the assembly, and even to uncover her. Karna then asked Duḥśāsana to take off the robes of the Pāṇḍavas and the attire of Draupadi. The Pāṇḍavas took off their upper garments, and Duḥśāsana began to drag off the attire of Draupadi. But as she thought of and cried to Hari (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), Dharma continually covered her anew with excellent clothes. Bhima swore that he would drink the blood of Duḥśāsana. All blamed Duḥśāsana and Dhṛtarāshtra. Vidura exhorted the assembly to answer the question put by Draupadi, and related the dialogue of Prahlāda (q.v.) and Āṅgīrasa (i.e. Sudhanvan) (§ 300).—§ 300: v. Prahlāda.—§ 301: The kings answered not a word, and Karna told Duḥśāsana to take away the slave-woman Kṛṣṇā to the inner apartments (II, 68). Dragged by Duḥśāsana, Draupadi saluted the assembly, complained of being exposed to the gaze of the crowd, and again asked them to answer her question. Bhisma again declared himself unable to decide it, but thought Yudhishtira ought to decide it (II, 69). Duryodhana said to Draupadi: "Let thy husbands decide the question, and, by making Yudhishtira the just a liar, free thee from slavery." Bhima said that only his obedience to Yudhishtira and the admonitions of Arjuna retained him from killing the wretched sons of Dhṛtarāshtra. Bhisma, Drona, and Vidura asked him to forbear (II, 70). Karna exhorted Draupadi to choose a new husband among the sons of Dhṛtarāshtra, and Duryodhana, after having exhorted Yudhishtira to decide the question, uncovered his left thigh and showed it to Draupadi. Bhisma swore that he would break this thigh of his. Vidura warned them, and was of opinion that Yudhishtira had no right to stake her. Duryodhana said that if Bhima, Arjuna, and the twins declared that Yudhishtira was not their master, then Draupadi should be free. Arjuna said that he was certainly their master before the play, "but having lost himself, let all the Kauravas judge whose master he could be after that." Just then a jackal began to cry near the agnihotra of Dhṛtarāshtra, and other terrible omens were heard. On that account Gāndhārī and Vidura remonstrated with Dhṛtarāshtra, who blamed Duryodhana and granted a boon to Kṛṣṇā. She chose that Yudhishtira should become free from slavery. As she was granted a second boon, she asked that Bhima and his brothers with their chariots and bows should regain their liberty. She refused to ask a third boon (II, 71). Karna praised Draupadi for having saved her husbands. Bhima threatened to slay all his foes instantly, but was retained by Arjuna and Yudhishtira (II, 72). Dhṛtarāshtra sent Yudhishtira with his brothers and Kṛṣṇa upon their chariots to Indraprastha, having asked him not to remember the harshness of Duryodhana (II, 73).

Gadāyuddha ("the combat with the mace"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 346 (i.e. Gadāyuddhaparvan).

[Gadāyuddhaparvan (°va)] ("the section relating to the battle with maces"). Cf. Gadāparvan, Gadāyuddha. § 613: Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (a), Saṅjaya related: Duryodhana agreed to fight his foes, one at a time (β); Yudhishtira granted his request, adding that if he could slay even one of the five Pāṇḍavas he would remain king. Duryodhana rose from the lake and challenged the Pāṇḍavas (γ); Yudhishtira taunted him with his unfair conduct in slaying Abhimanyu (δ) (IX, 32). Kṛṣṇa reproved Yudhishtira for his rashness in staking everything on the result of such a single combat with Duryodhana (ε); Bhīmasena assured Kṛṣṇa that Duryodhana would be no match for him in an encounter with the mace (ζ); Kṛṣṇa applauded Bhīma, and exhorted him to slay Duryodhana (η); Sātyaki, etc. (θ), applauded Bhīma; Bhīma's boastful address (i) to Yudhishtira and Duryodhana; Duryodhana's dignified reply, applauded by the Pāṇḍavas and *Srījaya*s; the elephants began to grunt and the steeds to neigh; the weapons of the Pāṇḍavas blazed forth of their own accord (IX, 33).—§ 614: When the battle between Bhīma and Duryodhana was about to commence, Bala-Rāma (b), having heard that that battle between his two disciples was about to begin, came and was worshipped by the Pāṇḍavas, Kṛṣṇa, etc. (a); he said that forty-two days had passed since he departed, having set out under the constellation Pushya and come back under the constellation Çravaṇa; he was clad in blue robes and of fair complexion. Then that dreadful encounter took place (IX, 34).—§ 615: Requested by Janamejaya (a), Vaiçampāyana related how Bala-Rāma had determined upon and set out (under the constellation Maitra) on a pilgrimage to the tīrthas on the Sarasvatī (β), having let the sacred fire be brought from Dvārakā and the priests, and having given away rich donations to everyone who wished for them, accompanied by priests, friends, brahmins, chariots, elephants, steeds, and servants, visiting all the sacred places along her course. In the course of his wanderings he at last came to Kurukṣetra. Requested by Janamejaya (γ), Vaiçampāyana related the Baladevatīrthayātrā (q.v.) (IX, 35-54). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Saṅjaya related: Beholding Bala-Rāma, Duryodhana rejoiced. According to the proposal of Bala-Rāma, Yudhishtira with his brothers and Duryodhana proceeded westwards to Samanipāṇaka on the southern side of the Sarasvatī. D. and Cā. praised Duryodhana. Description of Bhīma and Duryodhana (e). Duryodhana told Yudhishtira (who was standing among his brothers and Kṛṣṇa and Rāma) to behold the battle, protected by the Kaikeyas, etc. (π). That large assembly of kings sat down, as did also Bala-Rāma, who was worshipped by all around him. Bhīma and Duryodhana stood inciting each other with violent speeches (IX, 55). The dispute between the two heroes (ρ). At last Duryodhana said, "What is the use of bragging? fight with me," and was applauded by the Somakas, etc. The elephants grunted aloud and the steeds neighed repeatedly; the weapons of the Pāṇḍavas blazed forth of their own accord (IX, 56). Description of the combat; D., G., and men wondered; the Pāṇḍavas and the Somakas feared; adopting the manoeuvre called Kauçika, Duryodhana baffled Bhīma's mace; as Duryodhana once fell down to the earth, the *Srījaya*s cried aloud, so also did the Pāṇḍavas; Bhīmasena then had his coat of mail fractured and was prostrated on the ground, but rose, steadying himself with great effort (IX, 57). Arjuna inquired of Kṛṣṇa about the relative merits of the two combatants; Kṛṣṇa said that their training had been equal, but Bhīma was superior in strength; Duryodhana was superior in skill and had had more practice; by fighting fairly Bhīma would never succeed in winning, but by fighting unfairly he would surely be able to slay Duryodhana, just as the Asuras were vanquished by the gods, Virocana and Vṛtra by Indra with the aid of deception; "Bhīma has vowed to break the thighs of Duryodhana with his mace; let him accomplish that vow of his"; he censured Yudhishtira for his folly, and quoted a verse uttered by Uçanas; "Duryodhana has practised with the mace for full thirteen years." Arjuna struck his own left thigh before the eyes of Bhīmasena, who understood the sign. As Duryodhana set his heart on the manoeuvre called daasthana and jumped upwards, Bhīmasena hurled his mace at the thighs of Duryodhana and fractured them. Portents appeared; showers of blood and showers of dust were poured by Indra; a loud noise was made by Y., Rā., and Pç. (description of the portents); the Pāṇḍavas and the Pāṇḍavas were filled with anxiety; D., G., Si., and Cā. went away (IX, 58). The Pāṇḍavas and Somakas rejoiced; Bhīmasena rebuked Duryodhana, and touched his head with his left foot, which was censured by Yudhishtira, who grieved for Duryodhana (σ) (IX, 59); Baladeva's wrath was excited upon seeing Duryodhana struck below the navel; he rushed on to slay Bhīma, but was seized and pacified by Kṛṣṇa (τ). Baladeva praised Duryodhana and cursed Bhīmasena, and then ascended his chariot and proceeded towards Dvārakā. The Pāṇḍavas, etc. (v), became dejected; Kṛṣṇa and Yudhishtira, Bhīmasena, etc., and Duryodhana spoke about what had passed (IX, 60) (Kṛṣṇa asking the Pāṇḍava warriors to forbear insulting Duryodhana; Duryodhana's angry reply to Kṛṣṇa, charging him with every unfair act in course of the battle; Kṛṣṇa reminded Duryodhana of his own evil acts, and referred to his miserable end as the inevitable consequence of those acts; Duryodhana's boast with reference to his end, which he pronounced to be most glorious) (φ). Celestial showers descended on Duryodhana's head; G., Aps., and Si. praised him. The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa became ashamed; but Kṛṣṇa justified the use of unfair means for the slaughter of the Kuru warriors (χ) (IX, 61). The Pāṇḍava warriors proceeded to the Kuru camp, which was entirely deserted (ψ); Kṛṣṇa caused Arjuna to take down the Gaṇḍīva and his inexhaustible quivers, and then to dismount; then Kṛṣṇa also dismounted; the celestial ape disappeared, and the chariot (burnt by Droṇa and Karna with the Brāhma weapon), with its steeds, etc., was reduced to ashes. Kṛṣṇa congratulated Yudhishtira on his victory, and Yudhishtira attributed that victory to Kṛṣṇa's power (ω). In the encampment of the Kurus they found great wealth; at Kṛṣṇa's suggestion the Pāṇḍavas and Sātyaki resolved to pass the night at a spot outside the camp, on the banks of the Oghavati. They then dispatched Kṛṣṇa to Hastinapura in order to pacify the wrath of Gāndhārī, and to comfort her and Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He set out with Dāraka upon his chariot, yoked with Chaiya and Sugriva (IX, 62). Asked by Janamejaya, Vaiçampāyana said that the reason why Yudhishtira sent Kṛṣṇa to Hastinapura was his fear that Gāndhārī, by means of her ascetic merit, should reduce the Pāṇḍavas to ashes, because Duryodhana had been slain unfairly (aa); "Vyāsa will be there." Kṛṣṇa caused Dāraka to equip his chariot, and quickly set out for Hastinapura. He arrived at Dhṛtarāṣṭra's palace, where Vyāsa had arrived before him; he comforted Dhṛtarāṣṭra (ββ) and Gāndhārī (γγ), who said that her heart had again become steady (δδ). Then Kṛṣṇa came to know the evil that was meditated by Açvatthāman, and suddenly took leave, requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī to protect the Pāṇḍavas, and proceeded with Dāraka. Vyāsa comforted Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Kṛṣṇa arrived at the camp and informed the Pāṇḍavas (IX, 63). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Sanjaya narrated the lamentations of Duryodhana while lying on the field with his thighs broken (εε); he thought himself happy, and asked Sanjaya to bring his message to his parents and to Açvatthāman, etc. (ζζ) ("you should never place any confidence in the Pāṇḍavas"), and took leave of the message-bearers (εε); he was confident that Cūrvaḥa, the mendicant devotee, would avenge his death. Thousands of men, with eyes full of tears, fled away; the earth trembled, etc. The messengers went and informed Açvatthāman and then went away (IX, 64). Açvatthāman, etc. (ζζ), came to Duryodhana, who lay surrounded by carnivorous animals, etc. Açvatthāman's lament and Duryodhana's reply (ηη); Açvatthāman vowed to slay all the Pāṇḍavas; Duryodhana let Kṛpa install Açvatthāman as the Kuru generalissimo; then they took leave of Duryodhana and left him alone (IX, 65).

[Gālavacarita(m)] ("the history of Gālava"; cf. Gālavasya caritam). § 565 (Bhagavad): In ancient times, in order to try Viçvāmitra, who was then engaged in ascetic austerities, Dharma in the form of the Rshi Vasishṭha, and feigning himself hungry, came to his hermitage. Viçvāmitra cooked caru, but could not approach Dharma before his guest had dined with the other hermits. Dharma said, "I have already dined; wait here," and went away. Viçvāmitra, bearing that food on his head and himself subsisting on air, waited a hundred years, while the ascetic Gālava waited on him. Then Dharma accepted that food, which was still warm and fresh, and called Viçvāmitra a viprarshi, whereby he became a brahman. Gālava repeatedly asked Viçvāmitra to take a gift from him as his preceptor, and at last Viçvāmitra, seeing his persistency, requested him to give 800 white steeds each with one black ear (V, 108). Gālava got troubled and was gradually reduced to a skeleton. He thought of repairing to Vishṇu (or Kṛṣṇa), when his friend Garuḍa came, and said he had spoken to Vishṇu in his behalf, and that he would bear him (V, 107). Garuḍa described the East: here Savitṛ first rises, and the tapas of the Sādhyas is performed at eve; . . . the two eyes of Dharma; . . . here the daughters of Dakṣa in primeval times gave birth to their children, and here the sons of Kaçyapa first multiplied; here Çakra was first anointed as king of the gods; here is the tapas of Indra and the gods, all their religious ceremonies; here the Creator (bhagavān Lokabhūvanah) first sang the Vedas; here Sāvitṛ was first said by Savitṛ to the reciters of the Vedas (brahmavādishu), and here the Yajurveda (yajūmahi) was given by Sūrya; here the Soma juice was first drunk by the gods, etc.; it was here that Varuṇa, repairing to Pātāla, obtained prosperity (çriyam); here the birth, growth, and death of the ancient Vasishṭha took place; here first grow the hundred branches (śṛtayāḥ) of om; here the Munis called dhūmapāḥ first imbibed the smoke of the havis; here the thousand-rayed Sun slays, rising, the wicked and ungrateful men and Asuras; here is the gate of the three worlds and the path to heaven and to felicity (V, 108). Garuḍa mentioned the remarkable subjects in the South (dakṣiṇā diç, so called because Vivasvat gave it away as a dakṣiṇā): Pitṛpakṣas trailokasya; Uśmapāḥ devāḥ; the Viçvedevas with the Pitṛs, with whom they equally share the sacrifices in all the worlds; the second door of Dharma . . . ; the Devarshis, Pitṛlokarshis, and Rajarshis, who dwell here in great happiness . . . ; it is the region whither all must repair; . . . there are Nairṛtāḥ to be seen by the sinful; the Gandharvas chanting on Mandara and in the abodes of the viprarshis; Raivata who, hearing the Sāmans, retired to the woods, leaving wife and friends and kingdom; Sāvarni and Yācākrita setting a limit to Sūrya (the southern tropical circle, PCR.); Rāvaṇa soliciting immortality from the gods; Vṛtra incurring the enmity of Çakra; Vaitaraṇi filled with the bodies of persons condemned to hell . . . ; reaching this region the sun drops sweet water (i.e. the beginning of the rainy season, Nil.), and thence, proceeding again to the Vasishṭha direction (Vasishṭhīm kṣhṭhām—the quarter of the seven Ṛshis, i.e. the North, Nil), once more drops dew (himam); there is Garuḍa obtaining for food an enormous elephant and tortoise; the great Rshi Cakradhanus' birth from Sūrya took place here (he was afterwards known as Kapila who burned Sagara's sons); the perfect (siddhāḥ) brahmins, named Çivāḥ, who fully had mastered the Vedas, here obtained liberation (mokṣa); here is Bhogavati, ruled by Vāsuki, Takṣaka, and Airāvata. Those that have to journey hither encounter here a thick gloom, so that it cannot be penetrated by either the Sun or by Agni; "even thou shalt have to pass this road" (V, 109). Garuḍa mentioned the remarkable subjects and occurrences of the West: Varuṇa's origin; his instalment by Kaçyapa; the Moon, quaffing all the six juices of Varuṇa, becomes young again in the beginning of the bright fortnight; the Daityas being routed and bound fast by Vāyu; the mountain Asta; Night and Sleep; Çakra beholding the goddess (devīm) Diti asleep, and cutting off her foetus, whence sprang the Maruts; the roots of Himavat stretching towards the eternal Mandara (sunk in the Ocean, Nil.), the end of which is not to be reached by journeying for even 1,000 years; Surabhi milking on the shores of the lake with golden lotuses; in the midst of the Ocean the headless trunk of Svarbhānu; the chanting of the Vedas by Suvarṇa-çiras (invisible, and whose hair is eternally yellow); Dhṛjavati, the daughter of the muni Harimedhas, remaining in the air in consequence of Sūrya's injunction, 'stay'; . . . the sources of the rivers; here, in the abode of Varuṇa, are the waters of the three worlds; the abode of Ananta, and of Vishṇu, and of Pavana (the friend of Agni), and of the Maharshi Kaçyapa Māritca (V, 110). The North (uttara) has its name from saving (uttāraṇa) from sin; it is also called madhyama, i.e. between the East and the West. None can live there that is unamiable, etc. Garuḍa mentioned its remarkable subjects and places: Badari, the asylum of Nārāyaṇa, Kṛṣṇa, Jishṇu, and Brahmān; Maheçvara with the effulgence of the Yugānta fire; Puruṣa dwelling with Prakṛti, invisible to munis, D. with I., G., Y., and Si., except Nara and Nārāyaṇa; there Vishṇu appears alone, having 1,000 heads and 1,000 legs; there Candramas (the Moon) was installed in the sovereignty over the brahmins; Mahādeva receiving Gangā on his head; Devī practising austerities for obtaining Maheçvara; Kāma; the wrath (of Çiva, PCR.); here took place Kubera's instalment, on the breast of Kailāsa, in the sovereignty of Rā., Y., and G.; Caitraratha; here is the asylum of the Vaikhānasas; Mandākinī; Mandara; Saugandhikavāna, guarded by Nairṛtas; the plantain forest (kadalī-skandham), etc.; the Siddhas; the seven Ṛshis with Arundhati; Soṇi; Brahmān near Yajña . . . the munis named Dhāmā (? so B.) (whose origin, etc., are not known) guarding Gayantikādvāra (B. Gāṅgāmahādvāraṃ); the man who passes beyond them will certainly meet with destruction, except Nārāyaṇa and Nara or Jishṇu; here is Kailāsa, the abode of Ailavila; the origin of the ten Āpsarasas Vidyut-prabhāḥ; Vishṇupada, made by Vishṇu, when he, in his covering the worlds with three steps, stepped on the northern region; here took place king Marutta's sacrifice at Uçtrabīja, by the side of the golden lake; here was Himavat's gold-mine, that exhibited itself to the viprarshi Jimūta, who gave away the whole wealth to the brahmins, and had it called after his name (Jaimūta); here morning and evening the Lokapālas (dīcāṃ pālāḥ) proclaim "what business of what person shall we do?" it is called uttara (North) because it is superior (uttara) to all (V, 111). At the request of Gālava, Garuda carried him (description) to the East, and laughed at his foolish thoughts of casting away his life. At the mountain Rahabha they rested for some time (V, 112). On the peak of the Rahabha they met with a brahman lady, Çaṇḍīlī, engaged in penances; she gave them cooked food; they fell asleep. As Garuda awoke, his wings had fallen off. It was because he had, out of pity, thought of carrying the lady to the place where Mahādeva, Vishṇu, etc. (a), live together. She gave him his wings back, having warned him not to contemn women, and they set out, but failed to find the steeds. Viçvāmītra met them, and said the time had already passed, but promised to wait for some time more (V, 113). Garuda explained the etymology of hiranya (gold) and dhana (wealth), and why gold is not easily obtainable (see the note of PCR. from Nil.); it is guarded by the Ajaikapād-Ahirbradhānāḥ and by Dhanada (i.e. Kubera). They went to Garuda's friend, the Rājarekhi Yayāti Nāhuska (of the Lunar race), in Pratishṭhana, and told him the matter, and that Gālava, when he had paid off his debt, would devote himself to severe ascetic penances and give Yayāti a portion of his wealth of asceticism; "as many hairs as there are in a horse's body, so many regions of bliss are attained by him that gives away a horse" (V, 114). Yayāti, the performer of 1000 sacrifices, the liberal ruler of all the Kāçī, in view of the fact that they had come to him, passing over all the kings of the Solar race, not having the steeds, gave to Gālava his daughter Mādhavi, always solicited by gods, men, and Asuras. Garuda went away to his own abode, and Gālava offered Mādhavi to king Haryaçva of Ikhvāku's race at Ayodhya, who was desirous of offspring (V, 115), on the condition that he gave as her dower the 800 steeds of the kind wanted. Haryaçva had but 200 steeds of this kind; he therefore got the maiden—who by a brahman had been granted the boon that after each delivery she would be a maiden again—in order to beget only one son upon her, for his 200 steeds. This son was Vasumanas. Then Gālava offered her to king Dīvodāsa (V, 116), the Kāçī king, son of Bhīmasena. The same arrangement was made as with Haryaçva. She bore him Pratardana (V, 117). Then Gālava came to king Uçīnara in the city of the Bhojas, with whom the same arrangement was made. To him she bore Çibi. Then Gālava took the maiden and went to see Garuda (V, 118). Garuda said that the remaining 200 steeds were unobtainable. For in days of yore Reika sought at Kānya-kubja Gādhi's daughter Satyavati in marriage, and was requested by Gādhi to give 1000 steeds of this kind. Reika obtained them at Açvatīrtha, and gave them to the king. Performing the sacrifice Puṇḍarika, the king gave them away to the brahmins. The three kings had each purchased 200 of them from the brahmins, but the remaining 400, while being transported over the Vitasā, were taken by the river (so B.). Viçvāmītra, instead of obtaining the 200 steeds wanting, begot Ashṭaka upon Mādhavi, and gave him the steeds; Ashṭaka then went to a certain city (puram prāyāt tada Somapuraprabham) and Kauçika (i.e. Viçvāmītra) to the woods. Gālava dismissed Garuda, and returning the maiden to her father, he went into the woods (V, 119). Yayāti went to a hermitage on the confluence of the Gaṅgā and Yamunā, taking Mādhavi, Puru, and Yadu with him, desirous of again disposing of his daughter in a svayamvara. There was assembled a vast concourse of N., Y., (i., men, etc., and numerous Rahis resembling Brahman himself. Mādhavi selected the forest as her lord, practised tapas, and adopted a deer's mode of life (mṛgacārīṇī). King Yayāti died after having lived for many thousands of years. The progeny of Puru and Yadu multiplied greatly. Yayāti, resembling a maharshi, enjoyed the highest bliss in heaven for many thousands of years. On one occasion, while seated among the Rājarekhis and Maharshis, king Yayāti mentally disregarded all the gods and Rahis and men. Indra at once read his heart; the dwellers of heaven did not longer know him, and he was soon divested of his splendour (V, 120). For continuation v. Yayāti (§ 566).

[Gandhamādāna-praveça(h)] ("proceeding to the Gandhamādāna"). § 419 (cf. Tirthayātrāp.): Yudhisṭhira in vain proposed that Bhīma should return with Kṛṣṇā, Sahadeva, Dhaumya, the charioteers, cooks, etc., to Gaṅgā-dvāra, while Yudhisṭhira should proceed with Nakula and Lomaça. Bhīma promised to carry Kṛṣṇā and the twins. Kṛṣṇā said that she would be able to go. They entrusted to the Pulinda king (v. 10866, Kulindānam) Subāhu on the Himavat (inhabited by Kirātas, Tuṅgaṇas, and Pulindas), the servants Indrasena, etc., the cooks and stewards, and Draupadi's accoutrements, and began to proceed (III, 140).—§ 420: Yudhisṭhira complained to Bhīma that he had got seen Arjuna for five years. They now should, in company with brahmins of strict vows, enter Gandhamādāna (b), etc. (III, 141).—§ 421: Exhorted by Lomaça, when they were about to go to the mountain Mandara (b), they adored Ākāçagangā (v. 10902, read with B. ṣṇyā for puçyā) (c), and then proceeded with the ṛshis.—§ 422: Then they saw the bones of the Daitya Naraka (b) like to a white mountain.—§ 422 bis: Varāhāvātāra (q.v.), III, 142.—§ 423: As they, with the brahmins, entered Gandhamādāna (b) a terrible wind arose, followed by showers of rain, lightning, and torrents, during which they took shelter under trees, etc., Sahadeva carrying the sacred fire (agnihotrāṇi). When the tempest was over and the sun reappeared, they continued their journey (III, 143). When they had proceeded only a kroça, Draupadi sank down. Nakula ran forward and supported her, and the others hastily came, and Yudhisṭhira took her on his lap and lamented. Dhaumya and the other brahmins comforted and blessed him, and by reciting mantras capable of dispelling Rākshasas, and by performing ceremonies, while she was touched and fanned by the Pāṇḍavas, they made her regain her senses. The twins pressed her feet with their hands. Bhīma promised Yudhisṭhira to carry them all over the snowy mountains, "or Ghaṭotkaca will carry us all." With Yudhisṭhira's permission Bhīma thought of Ghaṭotkaca, who immediately came and was embraced by Bhīma (III, 144). Ghaṭotkaca carried Kṛṣṇā through the air, and hundreds of other Rākshasas carried the Pāṇḍavas and the brahmins, while Lomaça moved along the path of the Siddhas. So they proceeded through regions inhabited by Mlecchas, Vidyā-dharas, monkeys, Kinnaras, Kimpurushas, Gandharvas, etc., and the northern Kurus, towards Kailāsa and Badarī (c), where they were received by the numerous ṛshis, and where they dwelt, beholding Mainaka, Hiraṇyāçikkara, Bindusaras, and Bhāgīrathī, and offering oblations, etc. (III, 145).

Gāndhārīputra = Duryodhana, q.v.

[Gāndhārīputrotpatti(h)] ("birth of Gāndhārī's sons").

§ 180 (Sambhavad.): One day Draupyāna, gratified with Gāndhārī's hospitality, granted her the boon that she should have 100 sons (cf. § 174). She had borne the burden in her womb for two years, when she heard that Kuntī had brought forth a son; she then struck her womb violently, and there came out a hard mass of flesh like an iron ball. When she was about to throw it away, Vyāsa appeared and caused her to put the ball of flesh, sprinkled with cool water and divided into 101 parts (each of the size of a thumb), into 101 pots filled with clarified butter, which were placed in a concealed spot. After having said that she should open the covers of the pots after two years, Vyāsa retired to Himavat in order to devote himself to asceticism. Duryodhana was younger than Yudhisṭhira, being born on the same day as Bhīma. As soon as Duryodhana was born he began to cry like an ass, and ill-portending omens appeared. Vidura, etc., in vain told Dhṛtarāṣṭra to abandon him. Within a month the 100 sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and one daughter were born. During the pregnancy of Gāndhārī, Dhṛtarāṣṭra begot the Karṇa Yuyutsu upon a maidservant of the Vaiśya class (I, 115).

Gaṅgātoyārdramūrdhaja = Çiva (1000 names¹).

[Gaṅgāvatarana(m)] ("descent of the Gaṅgā"). § 389 (Sagara): Asked by Sagara to bring back the horse and deliver him from hell (Narakād), Ançumat went to the spot where the earth had been excavated, entered the sea by that very way, and beheld Kapila and the horse. As he bowed his head before Kapila, etc., Kapila granted him the horse, and that his fathers should be purified and go to heaven, when his son's son, by the favour of Çiva, brought Tripathagā (i.e. Gaṅgā) from heaven. When he had brought the horse back to the sacrificial yard and narrated all the events to Sagara, Sagara grieved no more, but praised Ançumat and finished the sacrificial rites. Sagara was greeted by all the gods and converted the sea into a son of himself (putratve kalpayām asa), and after a long reign placed his grandson on the throne and ascended to heaven. Ançumat ruled the whole earth like Sagara, and died after he had placed his son Dīṭṭha on the throne. Dīṭṭha in vain tried to effect the descent of Gaṅgā in order to raise his forefathers. He then anointed his son Bhagiratha as king, and practised austerities in the forest, and then ascended to heaven (III, 107). Bhagiratha made over his kingly duties to his minister (sacive), and (b) practised austerities on the Himavat during 1000 celestial years, living upon fruits, roots, and water. Then Gaṅgā Haimavatī appeared in a material form (mūrtimati), and promised to besprinkle the bodies of his forefathers and carry them to heaven, and as there existed none in the three worlds except Çiva, who was able to sustain her fall, she caused Bhagiratha to go to Kailāsa, where he, by his austerities, obtained the favour of Çiva (III, 108), who, surrounded by his awful attendants (pāriṣhadaiḥ), came to Himavat. There he caused Bhagiratha to pray to Gaṅgā. Gaṅgā immediately came down from the sky, in the presence of the gods, maharāṣis, Gandharvas, snakes, and Yakṣas, and Çiva received her on his forehead, whence she fell to the earth, divided into three streams. At her request Bhagiratha led her to the spot where the bodies of Sagara's sons lay, while Çiva went to Kailāsa with the celestials. Gaṅgā filled the sea, and Bhagiratha adopted her as his daughter and offered libations of water to his forefathers (III, 109).

Gaṅgā-Yamunayos tīrtham, a tīrtha. § 733p (Ānuçāsanik.): By bathing in G. and at the mountain Kalāñjara and offering to the Pitṛs, one obtains the merit of ten horse-sacrifices; by bathing in Shasṭīhrada one obtains great merit on the day of full moon in the month of Māgha; thirty millions and ten thousands of tīrthas come together in Prayāga, and by bathing there during the month of Māgha one attains to heaven: XIII, 25, 1721.

Gārtsamada, adj. ("belonging to Gṛtsamada"). § 736b (Vithavyop.): XIII, 30, 2006 (vaṃṣaḥ).

Garuda, the son of Kaçyapa and Vinatā, the vehicle of Vishnu (Kṛṣṇa), or the emblem of his flagstaff. § 11 (Anukram.): I, 2, 365.—§ 27 (Kaçyapa): I, 16, 1092 (son of Kaçyapa and Vinatā).—§ 32b (Kadrū): In the meantime G. came out bursting the egg and ascended the skies. The gods thought that it was Agni, but were undeceived): I, 23, 1239, 1245, 1248.—§ 33 (Āstikap.): Then the gods and the ṛshis praised G. and prevailed upon him to diminish his own energy and splendour: I, 23, †1255.—§ 34 (do.): Bearing his brother Aruṇa on his back G. went from his father's home and arrived at his mother's side on the other shore of the ocean and placed Aruṇa in the east: I, 24, 1262.—§ 36b (Kadrū): G. carried the snakes on his back, but ascended too near to the Sun so that the snakes became scorched by the rays of the Sun: I, 25, 1283.—§ 40 (Āstikap.): The serpents promised that if G. brought them the amṛta he and his mother should be freed from bondage (I, 27). Having been directed by Vinatā to live upon the Nishādas (ḍ) but not to injure the brahmins, and being taught by her how to know who is a brahman, he set out, and, having come to the Nishādas, he raised a great quantity of dust, and opened his mouth; there the Nishādas entered by thousands, being blinded by the dust, and were devoured (I, 28). A brahman who, with his wife of the Nishāda caste, entered the throat of G., and began to burn him, was recognized and relieved with his wife by G. (I, 29): I, 28, 1320, (1327); 29, (1343), 1344.—§ 41 (do.): As G.'s hunger was not appeased Kaçyapa told him of the elephant Supratika (ḍ) and the tortoise Vibhāvasu: I, 29, (1348).—§ 42 (do.): Then Kaçyapa blessed G.: I, 29, 1371.—§ 43 (do.): G. then seized the elephant and the tortoise and came to the tṛtha Alamba (? Nil. and BR., "without reposing") (ḍ). A banyan-tree invited him to sit on one of its huge branches, but the branch broke (I, 29). G. caught the branch with his beak, and perceiving Vālakhilyas suspended therefrom with their head downwards he continued to fly with the branch, the elephant, and the tortoise, fearing to kill the Vālakhilyas if he should throw away the branch. The Vālakhilyas therefore gave him the name Garuḍa (etymology: guruṃ bhāraṃ samāsadyoḍḍinaḥ, v. 1390). On Gandhamādāna he saw Kaçyapa engaged in ascetic devotions. Kaçyapa propitiated the Vālakhilyas (o) for him, then they abandoned the bough and went to Himavat to practise ascetic penances. According to the advice of Kaçyapa G. flew away for a hundred thousand of yojanas to a mountain without human beings, there he threw down the bough and ate the tortoise and the elephant. Then he again rose on his wings: I, 29, 1375; 30, 1384, 1390, 1400, 1407, 1413.—§ 44 (do.): Omens foreboding fear began to appear among the gods. Bṛhaspati declared that it was owing to the fault of Indra and the ascetic penances of the Vālakhilyas (of. § 45) that G. now approached to take away the soma. Indra then caused the gods to surround and watch the amṛta (I, 30).—§ 45 (Vālakhilya, pl.): I, 31, 1436, 1469, 1470 (by the penances of the Vālakhilyas G. had been born as the lord of winged creatures (patatrīṇām indraḥ, v. 1455)).—§ 46 (Āstikap.): G. attacked the gods, whom he blinded with dust, and Bhaumana lay as dead on the field. Indra caused Vāyu to dispel the dust. The Sādhyas and the Gandharvas fled eastwards, the Vasus and the Rudras towards the south, the Ādityas towards the west, and the Aṇvins towards the north. G. then slew nine Yakshas, Aṇvakranda, etc. (a), who guarded the amṛta. The amṛta on all sides was surrounded with fire. G. then divided his mouth into 8100 mouths, and taking water from many rivers he extinguished the fire. Then he assumed a diminutive body (I, 32), and passed through the spokes of the revolving keen-edged wheel of steel placed before the soma. Then there were two great snakes, who would reduce to ashes everyone who might be seen by them. G. covered their eyes with dust, and unseen by them mangled them to pieces. He then flew away with the amṛta, not drinking it himself. He met with Vishnu on his way and they agreed that G. should stay above Vishnu, sitting on the flagstaff of his chariot and be his vehicle, and be immortal and free from disease without drinking amṛta. While G. was flying Indra hurled his thunderbolt at him. G. did not feel the slightest pain, but in honour of Dadhica and Indra and the thunderbolt G. dropped a feather, and from its beauty he gained the name Suparṇa (I, 33). Indra and G. made friendship with each other, and agreed that G. should not give the soma to anyone for drink. Indra should bring it away after it had been put down by G., and G. should feed on the snakes. The snakes declared Vinatā to be free; G. placed down the soma on some kuça grass, and while the snakes were performing their ablutions, their daily devotions, and other religious rites, Indra took up the amṛta and returned to heaven. When the snakes licked the kuça grass their tongues were divided in twain, and the kuça grass, from the contact with the amṛta, became sacred from this time (I, 34): I, 32, 1471 (pakshirāj), 1477, 1485, 1494; 33, 1509, 1513; 34 (1520), (1528), 1534, 1543.—§ 99 (Amṇavat.): I, 65, 2548 (among the Vainateyas).—§ 120 bis (do.): I, 66, 2603 (Vainateyaḥ, reckoned among the Ādityas).—§ 129 (do.): I, 66, 2635 (Arūṇau, sons of Vinatā).—§ 191 (Arjuna): I, 123, 4830 (present at the birth of Arjuna).—§ 244 (Rājyalābhap.): I, 207, 7575 (dvipaksha-G°prakhyaḥ dvārakḥ).—§ 289 (Argḥāharaṇap.): II, 38, 1395 (patatām mukhaṃ).—[§ 277 (Jarāsandhavadhap.): II, 24, 945, 946 (Garutman, took his seat on the flagstaff of Kṛṣṇa)].—§ 512 (Ghoshayātrāp.): III, 241, 14897 (rathair G°niḥvanaiḥ).—§ 549 (Pāṇḍavapr.): IV, 2, 61 (patatām iva, sc. varaḥ).—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 71, 2578 (Kṛṣṇa identified with Ariṣṭanemi, Garuḍa, Suparṇa).—§ 564 (Mātalīyop.): V, 101, 3600 (°atmajāḥ, enumeration of his descendants); 105, 3674, (3676), 3704, 3705 (G. who wished to devour the serpent Sumukha was humiliated by Vishnu, who then threw Sumukha upon the

Beholding the sons of Drupada and Kuntibhoja and Rā. in thousands slain by Açvatthāman, Yudhishtira, etc. (ξ), set their hearts firmly on battle. Somadatta & Yuyudhāna + Bhīma, who made Somadatta insensible, and slew Pratipa's son Bāhlika (the father of Somadatta), ten sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra; Nagadatta, etc. (ο), & Bhīma, who slew them. Vṛkaratha (the brother of Karna) & Bhīma, who slew him, and thereupon seven brothers of Çakuni, and pressed Çataandra down into the earth. Çakuni's five brothers, Garāksha, etc. (π) & Bhīma, who slew them. Yudhishtira & Droṇa; Yudhishtira began to slay the Ambashṭhas (ρ); Droṇa and Yudhishtira employed the Vāyavya weapon; then Droṇa employed the Vāruṇa, Yāmya, Āgneya, Tvāshṭra, and Sāvitra, which were all baffled by Yudhishtira; then Droṇa invoked the Aindra and the Prajapatya weapons, and Yudhishtira the Mahendra; then both employed the Brāhma weapon. Droṇa (with the Vāyavya weapon, abandoning Yudhishtira) & Drupada's division, who fled, but were rallied by Arjuna and Bhīma, who attacked Droṇa from two sides, and were followed by the Kaikayas, etc. (σ). The Kurus fled; Droṇa and Duryodhana in vain tried to rally them (VII, 157). Duryodhana urged Karna to defeat the Pāṇḍavas (Pāṇḍalas, etc. (τ)); Karna vowed to slay Arjuna, etc. (υ), and was ridiculed by Kṛpa (φ), who said that Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (χ), were all fighting for the Pāṇḍavas; Karna vowed to cut off Kṛpa's tongue if Kṛpa addressed him again in the same strain, naming Duryodhana, etc. (ψ), as invincible, and saying that Bhīshma, etc. (ω), had been slain by the work of destiny (VII, 158). Açvatthāman in rage rebuked Karna (aa); Duryodhana and Kṛpa pacified Karna and Açvatthāman. Karna & the Pāṇḍavas + Pāṇḍalas, who were vanquished and slaughtered. Urged by Duryodhana, Açvatthāman, etc. (ββ), & Arjuna in order to rescue Karna; Arjuna slew the steeds and driver of Karna and made him loose his bow; Karna took shelter in Kṛpa's chariot. Duryodhana (rallying the troops) & Arjuna; Kṛpa urged Açvatthāman to proceed against Arjuna. Açvatthāman made Duryodhana desist from an encounter with Arjuna; Duryodhana urged Açvatthāman to slay the Pāṇḍalas and the Somakas (VII, 159). Açvatthāman said that he, etc. (γγ), could destroy the foe within the twinkling of an eye, and promised to fight with the Pāṇḍalas, etc. (δδ). Açvatthāman routed the Pāṇḍalas, etc. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Açvatthāman; Si. and Ck., etc., applauded them; Açvatthāman cut off the bow, the standard, the drivers, and the steeds of Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; the Pāṇḍalas and Sṛjīyās fled away (VII, 160). Yudhishtira and

Bhīma & Açvatthāman + Duryodhana; Yudhishtira slew the Ambashṭhas, etc. (δδ), Bhīma the Abhishāhas, etc. (ce), Arjuna the Yaudheyas, etc. (ξξ). Droṇa employed the Vāyavya weapon; the Pāṇḍalas fled, but were rallied by Bhīma and Arjuna, who attacked Droṇa from both sides together with the Sṛjīyās, etc.; the Kauravas fled; Duryodhana and Droṇa endeavoured in vain to rally them (VII, 161). Sātyaki (with white steeds of the Sindhu breed) + Bhīmasena & Somadatta (Bāhlika's son), who was slain by Sātyaki. Yudhishtira + Pāṇḍavas + Prabhadrakas & Droṇa; Droṇa and Yudhishtira employed the Vāyavya weapon. Kṛṣṇa dissuaded Yudhishtira from fighting with Droṇa; he should go to Duryodhana, Arjuna, and Bhīma (VII, 162). Droṇa, etc. (ηη), afflicted one another and the troops; both armies were dejected. The remnants of the slaughtered army were once more disposed in array; Droṇa in the van, Çalya in the rear, Açvatthāman and Çakuni on the right and left flanks; Duryodhana protected all the troops. Duryodhana ordered his troops to take up lighted lamps and torches. D., R., G., D.-r., V.-D., Aps., N., Y., U., and K. also took up lamps, and many lamps came from Nārada and Purvata for Duryodhana's sake. (Description); the glare reached the skies, and awakened by it, D., G., Y., R., etc., and Aps. came thero (VII, 163). Duryodhana appointed his brothers Vikarna, etc. (θθ), to protect Droṇa from the rear; Kṛtavarma should protect his right wheel, and Çala his left. The remnants of the Trigartas he placed in the van; especially Droṇa should be protected against Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; "Karna will vanquish Arjuna, Bhīmasena, and others." Arjuna & the Kauravas; Açvatthāman & the Pāṇḍala ruler; Droṇa & the Sṛjīyās (VII, 164). Yudhishtira commanded all his warriors to proceed against Droṇa alone. The Pāṇḍalas & the Somakas & Droṇa; Kṛtavarma & Yudhishtira (advancing against Droṇa); Yuyudhāna & Bhūri; Karna & Sahadeva (advancing in order to get at Droṇa); Duryodhana & Bhīmasena; Çakuni & Nakula; Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin; Duhśānana & Prativindhya; Açvatthāman & Ghaṭotkaca; Vṛshaena & Drupada (advancing against Droṇa); Çalya & Virāṭa (advancing in order to slay Droṇa); Citrāsena & Nakula's son Çatānika (advancing in order to slay Droṇa); Alambusha & Arjuna; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Droṇa, etc.; Yudhishtira retreated, and Kṛtavarma once more began to protect the wheel of Droṇa's chariot (VII, 165). Bhūri & Sātyaki who slew him. Açvatthāman & Sātyaki; Ghaṭotkaca & Açvatthāman, who swooned away, but then made Ghaṭotkaca insensible, who was borne away by his charioteer. Bhīma crushed the steeds, the charioteer, and the chariot of Duryodhana, who ascended Nandaka's chariot, and was regarded as slain, also by Yudhishtira, who rushed to Bhīma. The Pāṇḍalas, etc. (ι), & Droṇa (VII, 166). Karna & Sahadeva, who was worsted by Karna, who touched him with his bow and scoffed at him (κκ), but did not slay him, recollecting the words of Kunti; Sahadeva ascended the chariot of the Pāṇḍala prince Janamejaya. Virāṭa & Çalya, who deprived him of his chariot and then slew Virāṭa's brother Çatānika; once more Virāṭa (ascending Çatānika's chariot) & Çalya, who made him insensible; Virāṭa was carried away by his charioteer; the host fled away. Alambusha (with terrible-looking Piçças of equine fuces yoked to his chariot; description) & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa), who vanquished him; Alambusha fled away. Arjuna quickly proceeded towards Droṇa, slaughtering men, etc.; they all fled (VII, 167). Citrāsena (Dhārtarāshṭra) & Nakula's son Çatānika, who vanquished him; Citrāsena ascended Kṛtavarma's chariot; Vṛshasena & Drupada, who swooned and was carried off by his charioteer; Vṛshasena caused a great slaughter among the Pāṇḍavas and the Somakas, and then proceeded to Yudhishtira. Duḥśāsana (Dhṛtarāṣṭra) & Prativindhya, who was vanquished by him and rescued by his brothers, ascended the chariot of Sutasoma and continued to fight Duḥśāsana, to whose assistance many warriors rushed, and a fierce battle ensued (VII, 168). Nakula & Çakuni, who was carried away by his charioteer; Nakula proceeded towards Droṇa. Çikhaṇḍin (proceeding towards Droṇa) & Kṛpa; (Çikhaṇḍin was carried away by his charioteer); the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas surrounded him, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons surrounded Droṇa. A battle commenced once more (description) (VII, 169). Dhṛṣṭadyumna (+ the Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍavas) & Droṇa; D., G., and Dā. wished prosperity to Droṇa; Karna, etc. (λλ) (in order to rescue Droṇa) & Dhṛṣṭadyumna; Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Drumasaṇa, whom he slew; the six chariot warriors & Dhṛṣṭadyumna; Sātyaki (in order to rescue Dhṛṣṭadyumna) & Karna; the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra + Karna + Karna's son Vṛshasena & Dhṛṣṭadyumna + Sātyaki; Gāṇḍīva was heard, and the sound of Arjuna's chariot. Karna counselled Duryodhana to encompass and slay Dhṛṣṭadyumna and Sātyaki; Duryodhana dispatched Çakuni with a large force (also Duḥśāsana, etc. (μν)) against Arjuna, to slay Arjuna, etc. (νν); a great fight commenced. Çakuni, etc., & Sātyaki; Droṇa & Dhṛṣṭadyumna + the Pāṇḍavas (VII, 170). Sātyaki was surrounded by many leaders of the Kuru army; Duryodhana & Yuyudhāna, who forced him to fly away (having mounted the chariot of Kṛtavarma), and routed the foes with whom he was engaged. Arjuna & Çakuni (+ his son Ulūka), whom he deprived of his chariot; Çakuni ascended the chariot of Ulūka; Arjuna slew the Kuru army. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna blew their conches. Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Droṇa, whom Dhṛṣṭadyumna checked and caused an immense carnage. Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (ξξ), blow their conches (VII, 171). Duryodhana in anger addressed Droṇa and Karna (οο), who furiously attacked and routed the Pāṇḍava army; Droṇa, etc. (ππ); the Pāṇḍava host fled, throwing down their torches before the eyes of Bhīmasena, etc. (ρρ), pursued by Droṇa and Karna; Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa rallied the retreating troops (σσ); a wild battle ensued between the Kurus (especially Droṇa and Karna) and the Pāṇḍavas (especially Yudhishtira) (description) (VII, 172). Karna & Dhṛṣṭadyumna, who was deprived of his chariot by him, but then slew his steeds and ascended the chariot of Arjuna and desired to proceed, but was stopped by Yudhishtira. Karna routed the Pāṇḍavas, who, with the Somakas, attacked Karna. Meanwhile Karna's charioteer had yoked other white steeds of the Sindhu breed to his chariot. The Pāṇḍava host (and the Srñjayas) fled (description); others, only observed by Droṇa, fled away on all sides. Yudhishtira and Arjuna (and Kṛṣṇa) conversed about Karna; Arjuna asked Kṛṣṇa to proceed towards Karna. Kṛṣṇa said that none except Arjuna and Ghaṭotkaca could encounter him; but Arjuna must not do it, as long as he had the lance given him by Indra; "but Ghaṭotkaca (who had celestial weapons, as also those used by Rā. and As.), would vanquish Karna." They prevailed upon Ghaṭotkaca to encounter Karna (ττ); "thou, O Ghaṭotkaca, Sātyaki, and Bhīmasena are the foremost among all our warriors; Sātyaki will protect thy rear." Ghaṭotkaca & Karna (VII, 173). Duryodhana urged Duḥśāsana to protect Karna against Ghaṭotkaca. Meanwhile the Rā. Jaṭāsura's son Alambusha said to Duryodhana that he wished to slay the Pāṇḍavas in order to avenge his father, whom they had slain, performing some Rā.-slaying incantations. Duryodhana urged him to slay Ghaṭotkaca. Alambusha & Ghaṭotkaca; both resorted to their power of illusion (υυ); Ghaṭotkaca slew Alambusha and threw his head upon Duryodhana's chariot, promising that he should also see the slaughter of Karna and then his own. Ghaṭotkaca & Karna (VII, 174). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Saṅjaya described Ghaṭotkaca's person, armour, weapons, and chariot; then the encounter between Karna & Ghaṭotkaca, who employed Rā.-illusion, and even destroyed the celestial weapon of Karna; a Vāyava weapon was employed by Karna to destroy clouds; Ghaṭotkaca was once seen on a chariot, created by illusion, yoked with a number of asses, looking like elephants, and having the faces of Piçācas; Ghaṭotkaca employed an açani of Rudra's workmanship, furnished with eight wheels; there appeared many Rā., Pç., and Yātudhānas, etc. (VII, 175). Meanwhile, the Rā. Alāyudha, with many thousands of Rā., came to Duryodhana, and said that he wished to avenge his kinsmen Baka and Kirmira, and his friend Hidimba, and the marriage of Hidimbā, by slaying all the sons of Kuntī, especially Bhīma, with Kṛṣṇa, Ghaṭotkaca, etc. Duryodhana urged him to slay Bhīma. Alāyudha's chariot, steeds, weapons, etc., were pretty much as those of Ghaṭotkaca's (description) (VII, 176). The Kurus with Duryodhana welcomed Alāyudha, having been (with Droṇa, etc. (φφ)), very anxious about Karna, who was engaged with Ghaṭotkaca. Alāyudha & Ghaṭotkaca (abandoning Karna); Karna & Bhīmasena; Bhīma (disregarding the advancing Karna) & Alāyudha (abandoning Ghaṭotkaca) + all the other Rā. (who fled away); the Rā. attacked the elephants, the Pāṇḍavas, and the Srñjayas. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to proceed in Bhīma's wake, and to let Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (χχ), proceed against Karna, Nakula, etc. (ψψ), slay the other Rā.; Arjuna himself should resist Droṇa's division; then Kṛṣṇa dispatched Ghaṭotkaca to protect Bhīmasena (VII, 177). Ghaṭotkaca (abandoning Karna) & Alāyudha (brother of Baka). Meanwhile, Yuyudhāna, etc. (ωω), & the Rā. of Alāyudha; Arjuna shot many kaṣatriyas, Karna many Pāṇḍavas headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Çikhaṇḍin, etc. Bhīma + Nakula, etc. (ααα) (having slain the Rā.) & Karna; the Pāṇḍavas & Droṇa; Alāyudha resorted to his power of illusion, and so did Ghaṭotkaca, who cut off the head of Alāyudha and threw it down before Duryodhana, who, with all his troops, became full of anxiety, while the Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍavas roared like lions (VII, 178). Karna & the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (βββ); many of them entered the force of Yudhishtira. Ghaṭotkaca & Karna, who had his steeds and charioteer slain by Ghaṭotkaca, who then disappeared from view, and created a terrible illusion (description), which severely afflicted the Kuru host, which at last fled; Karna alone kept his ground, looked at by all the Saindhavas and Bāhlikas; Karna's steeds were again slain by Ghaṭotkaca, and his celestial weapon was baffled by Ghaṭotkaca's illusion. The Kauravas urged him to slay Ghaṭotkaca with the dart presented to him by Indra, without minding Bhīma, etc. (γγγ). When Karna held the dart in his hands Ghaṭotkaca began to fly away in fear, all creatures in the skies uttered loud cries, etc.; Karna hurled the dart, and Ghaṭotkaca was slain, and falling upon the Kaurava army with his gigantic body, he slew a full akṣauhini, desirous of benefiting the Pāṇḍavas. The Kauravas uttered loud shouts of joy; Karna ascended the chariot of Duryodhana and entered the Kuru host (VII, 179). The Pāṇḍavas were filled with grief; only Kṛṣṇa with transports of delight raised his warory, embracing Arjuna, to whom he explained that he rejoiced because Karna's dart could not now kill Arjuna, having been employed against Ghaṭotkaca; he recited to Arjuna how he had gradually caused all the foes of the Pāṇḍavas to be slain (VII, 180), which he explained more explicitly (४४४) (VII, 181). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra why Karna had not hurled the fatal dart at Arjuna, Saṁjaya assigned Kṛṣṇa's policy as the reason (६६६), though it had formed the subject of deliberation with Duryodhana, etc. (५५५), every night. Sātyaki asked Kṛṣṇa why Karna had not hurled his dart at Arjuna; Kṛṣṇa said that Duḥśāsana, etc., had frequently discussed this subject, and Karna had approved of it; but Kṛṣṇa always used to stupefy him; Kṛṣṇa had neither sleep nor joy in his heart, as long as he could not frustrate that instrument for killing Arjuna (VII, 182). Concluding from Karna's not using the dart (६६६, ५५५), Dhṛtarāshṭra attributed the ill success of the Kurus to Destiny, their own folly, and the policy of Kṛṣṇa, and asked Saṁjaya about the battle (१११). Saṁjaya related: All the Kauravas uttered loud shouts and began to slay the Pāṇḍava troops. Yudhisṭhira told Bhīmasena to resist the Dhṛtarāshṭra host, himself sitting down with tearful face; Kṛṣṇa comforted him, but Yudhisṭhira remembered the many services Ghaṭotkaca had rendered them (१११); Droṇa and Aṣvatthaman were the real cause of Abhimanyu's slaughter, but it was Jayadratha who was slain; "Droṇa and Karna are the root of our woes"; therefore Yudhisṭhira will slay Karna, Bhīmasena being engaged with Droṇa's division. Yudhisṭhira quickly proceeded against Karna, followed by the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (३३३). Vyāsa approached Yudhisṭhira and congratulated him upon Karna's having employed his dart against Ghaṭotkaca; "on the 5th day from hence the earth will be thine." Then he disappeared (VII, 183).

[Ghoshayātrāparvan] ("the expedition to the cattle station"), the 43rd of the minor parvas of Mbh. (cf. Ghoshayātrā). § 512: When the Pāṇḍavas had arrived at the lake (of Dvaitavana, Nil.), and were dwelling in the woods visited by veda-knowing ascetics, there came to them a brahman, who afterwards went away to Dhṛtarāshṭra and told him how the Pāṇḍavas had become emaciated and reduced by wind and sun. Dhṛtarāshṭra was much afflicted, considering that Yudhisṭhira, who had formerly used to sleep on beds of rañku skins and to be wakened by sūtas and māgadhas, now slept on the bare ground; he lamented the treatment he had permitted to be meted out to the Pāṇḍavas, and feared lest they would avenge themselves; Arjuna, he thought, would not have left heaven, where he received the celestial weapons, if it were not for this purpose. This Çakuni told to Duryodhana, who was sitting with Karna, and Duryodhana was filled with grief (III, 236). Çakuni and Karna proposed to Duryodhana that they should go to Dvaitavana to exult over the Pāṇḍavas (III, 237). Duryodhana gladly approved the proposal, but feared that he might not obtain the permission of Dhṛtarāshṭra, who thought that the Pāṇḍavas had become more powerful than before in consequence of their ascetic austerities. He asked them, with Duḥśāsana, to find out some skilful pretext. The next morning Karna and Çakuni agreed with Duryodhana that they should go there under the pretext of supervising their cattle stations (III, 238). They then all saw Dhṛtarāshṭra. A cowherd, named Samāṅga, who had been instructed beforehand, came to the king and spoke to him of the cattle. Karna and Çakuni asked him to give permission to Duryodhana to go thither. Dhṛtarāshṭra suggested to send some faithful men, fearing some collision with the Pāṇḍavas if they were to go thither themselves; for though Yudhisṭhira would not suffer his wrath to be awakened, Bhīma and Draupadī were naturally passionate. Çakuni promised that they would not go to the spot where the Pāṇḍavas resided, and obtained the permission. Duryodhana then started with Karna, Duḥśāsana, Çakuni, etc., and ladies by the thousand, followed by the citizens and their wives, with 8,000 chariots, etc., and took up his quarters at the distance of a gavyūti from the lake of Dvaitavana (III, 239). Having caused the calves to be marked, etc., Duryodhana, etc., began to sport and go a-hunting, and came to the lake. Yudhisṭhira was then, together with Draupadī, celebrating the diurnal rājaraśi sacrifice according to the ceremonial used in the forest. When the attendants of Duryodhana came to the banks of the lake to construct pleasure-houses, they were forbidden to enter by a number of Gandharvas, who told them that the king of the Gandharvas had come from the abode of Kubera, with his followers and several hosts of Apsarasas, etc., and when Duryodhana sent a number of his warriors, they also were prevailed upon by the Gandharvas to return (III, 240). A battle ensued between the soldiers of Duryodhana and the Gandharvas, headed by their king Citrāsena; the soldiers of Duryodhana fled, except Karna, who killed hundreds of Gandharvas. Duryodhana, Çakuni, Duḥśāsana, and Vikarna returned to assist Karna, and the battle was renewed. Citrāsena made use of illusion; it seemed as if every warrior of the Kuru army were surrounded by ten Gandharvas. The entire army of Duryodhana again fled, except Karna. The Gandharvas then destroyed the chariot of Karna, who, mounting the chariot of Vikarna, was forced to drive away (III, 241). Duryodhana refused to fly, but the Gandharvas destroyed his chariot and slew his charioteer and horses; thereupon Citrāsena took him prisoner, and Duḥśāsana, who was seated on his chariot, and Citrāsena, Vivīçati, Vinda, and Anuvinda, and the royal ladies, were taken by other Gandharvas, [and Durviśaha, Durmukha, and Durjaya, v. 14924]. The flying soldiers and ministers of Duryodhana took refuge with Yudhisṭhira (III, 242). Yudhisṭhira, saying that the honour of the family was being destroyed by the Gandharvas' seizing Duryodhana, etc., in their presence, prevailed upon his brother to rescue Duryodhana, etc. (v. 14947: "the liberation of a foe from distress is equal to the bestowal of a boon, sovereignty, and the birth of a son, all the three put together"), if possible, by conciliation or lightly skirmishing, otherwise by all means, Yudhisṭhira being prohibited from partaking in the combat by his sacrifice. Arjuna promised to rescue Duryodhana or kill the king of the Gandharvas (III, 243). The four Pāṇḍavas, cased in mail and riding in chariots drawn by fleet horses, encountered the Gandharvas; as these would not set Duryodhana, etc., free, as requested by Arjuna, a fierce battle ensued (III, 244). The Gandharvas, in vain, attempted to break the chariots of the Pāṇḍavas; especially Arjuna, by means of his Āgneya weapon, sent millions of them to the abode of Yama. The Gandharvas then rose up to the skies, taking the Dhātaraśtras with them, and showering maces, darts, etc., upon Arjuna, who killed them with his weapons Sthūlākarna (B. Sthūnākarna), Indrajāla, Saura, Āgneya, and Saumya. At last Citrāsena rushed at Arjuna, armed with a mace of iron; as Arjuna cut that mace in seven pieces with his arrows, Citrāsena, by means of his science, concealed himself from the view of Arjuna, and thus continued to fight with him; but Arjuna destroyed his power of concealing himself by shooting at him with his celestial arms guided by the sound (śabdave-dham samācṛitya). Then Citrāsena showed himself to Arjuna, reminding him of his being his friend, and there was put an end to the battle (III, 245). Citrāsena related to Arjuna that, staying in his abode, he had become acquainted with the purpose of Duryodhana, etc., and had been requested by Indra to bring Duryodhana thither in chains together with his counsellors. Arjuna entreated him to set Duryodhana free, but, at the request of Citrāsena, they left it to be decided by Yudhishtira; Yudhishtira then liberated all the Kauravas. The Gandharvas went away with the Apsarasas, and Indra revived the slain Gandharvas by sprinkling amṛta upon them. Friendly admonished by Yudhishtira, Duryodhana, overwhelmed with shame, returned to his capital (III, 246). When Duryodhana, afflicted with grief, was approaching Hastinapura with his army, Karna congratulated him on the honourable victory over the Gandharvas (III, 247). Duryodhana told Karna that, as the Gandharvas had resorted to illusion and ascended the skies, he had been captured with his army, and that it was the Pāṇḍavas who had vanquished the Gandharvas (III, 248). Duryodhana continued his narrative and declared that he would stay there abstaining from food, and that the others, headed by Duḥśāsana, should go to Hastinapura. He then offered the royal power to Duḥśāsana. Duḥśāsana, his voice choked in tears, refused to accept it. Karna reproached them for weeping thus, and declared that the Pāṇḍavas, who resided in the dominions of Duryodhana and enjoyed happiness under his protection, only did their duty in liberating him (III, 249). Karna continued explaining his opinion, that those who resided in the king's realm should always exert themselves to the best of their ability for the king; if the Pāṇḍavas had not followed Duryodhana to the battle it would have been an improper act on their part. Duryodhana, firmly resolved to leave the world, desired not to rise from where he sat (III, 250). Çakuni reproached Duryodhana for his foolish despair, saying that he ought rather to reward the Pāṇḍavas by granting them their paternal kingdom. Duryodhana embraced Duḥśāsana, but did not waver from his purpose; he spread kuça grass on the earth, etc., and began to pray and worship mentally.—§ 513: The Daityas and Dānavas who had formerly been vanquished by the gods and were dwelling in Pātāla, having ascertained Duryodhana's purpose, commenced a sacrifice with formulas, revealed by Bṛhaspati and Uçanas, according to the rites indicated in the Atharvaveda and the Upanishad, assisted by brahmins of rigid vows, well versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. After these rites were ended a sorceress (kṛtyā) arose, whom the Daityas caused to bring Duryodhana to them in the night (III, 251). The Dānavas said to him: "Do not do such a rash act as the vow of starvation. The suicide ever sinks into hell (adho yāti), and is blamed . . . In days of old we had obtained thee by ascetic austerities from Maheçvara; the upper part of thy body is wholly made of vajras, and is, therefore, invulnerable to weapons of every description; the lower part of thy body was made of flowers by Devi herself . . . Brave kshatriyas, headed by Bhagadatta, will slay thy foes . . . In order to aid thee many Dānavas (v. 15172: Daityas and Rakshasas) have been born on earth. Other Asuras will also possess Bhishma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, and others; possessed by those Asuras these heroes will abandon their kindness and fight with thy foes . . . We have already settled the means of slaying Arjuna; the slain Naraka has assumed the form of Karna; recollecting his former hostility he will encounter both Keçava (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) and Arjuna, and vanquish Arjuna in battle. Indra in disguise will deprive Karna of his earrings and coat of mail. We also have appointed innumerable Daityas and Rakshasas, the so-called Samçaptakas, who will slay Arjuna . . . Thou art ever our refuge, as the Pāṇḍavas are the refuge of the gods." Then the Dānavas embraced and cheered him, and that very goddess (kṛtyā) carried him back to the spot where he had sat down intent upon putting an end to his life, and there she vanished. Now Duryodhana considered all as a dream, and thought he should defeat the Pāṇḍavas in battle. And also Karna, being possessed by the soul of Naraka, and the Samçaptakas, possessed by the Rakshasas, were desirous of slaying Arjuna; and Bhishma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, etc., influenced by the Dānavas, were not so affectionate towards the Pāṇḍavas as they had been. Duryodhana did not tell anyone of this.—§ 514: When the night had passed away Karna again exhorted Duryodhana, and promised to slay Arjuna in battle. Duryodhana arose and arranged his army, and went to Hastinapura, accompanied by Karna, Çakuni, his brothers headed by Duḥśāsana and Bhuricravas, and Somadatta, and Bāhlika (III, 252).—§ 515: Karna adigvijaya (q.v.).—§ 516: Duryodhanayajña (q.v.).—§ 517: Hearing the vow of Karna, Yudhishtira, filled with anxiety, made up his mind to abandon Draivavana. Duryodhana with his brothers, and Bhishma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, and Karna ruled the earth justly and worshipped the brahmins by sacrifices and profuse gifts (III, 257).

Goharaṇaparvan ("the section relating to the robbing of the kine of Virāṭa," the 55th of the minor parvas of Mbhhr.; cf. Gograhaṇa). § 552: Meanwhile the spies of Duryodhana returned to Hāstinapura and informed Duryodhana, who was sitting with Droṇa, Karna, Kṛpa, Bhīshma, his brothers, and the Trigartas, that they had not found out the Pāṇḍavas, but that Kicaka (b) had been slain (IV, 25). Karna and Duḥçāsana proposed that the other spies should be sent (IV, 26). Droṇa said: "People like the Pāṇḍavas never perish, let the abode which the Pāṇḍavas are to occupy now be settled" (IV, 27). Bhīshma applauded Droṇa (IV, 28). Kṛpa recommended precautions (IV, 29). The Trigarta king, Suçarman, supported by Karna, proposed to invade the city of Virāṭa and to rob his kine and wealth, and thus to take revenge for the invasions of the Matsyas headed by Kicaka. Duryodhana caused Duḥçāsana to array their forces. Suçarman set out towards the south-east on the seventh day of the dark fortnight, and the Kauravas on the eighth day (IV, 30). After Kicaka had been slain, Virāṭa began to rest his hopes on the Pāṇḍavas. His brothers, Çatānika and Mudirāksha, and the king himself, and Sūryadatta and Çāṅkha, the eldest son of Virāṭa, put on their coats of mail. Virāṭa also caused Çatānika to order chariots for Kaṅka, Vallava, Tantripāla, and Dāmaçranthi (i.e. Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīmasena, Nakula, and Sahadeva in disguise) (IV, 31). The Matsyas overtook the Trigartas shortly before sunset. Çatānika and Viçālāksha penetrated into the heart of the Trigarta host. Virāṭa, with Sūryadatta in his van and Mudirāksha in his rear, began a single combat from chariots against Suçarman (IV, 32). The night interrupted the battle for a while, but it began once more when the moon arose. Suçarman and his younger brother made Virāṭa prisoner, and the Matsyas began to fly; Bhīma would uproot a tree, but was prevented by Yudhiṣṭhira, lest the people should recognize them; then Bhīma, with Nakula and Sahadeva as protectors of his wheels, rushed against Suçarman, and the Matsya warriors, Virāṭa's son, and Yudhiṣṭhira, etc., followed him; the charioteer of Suçarman was dragged to the ground. Mudirāksha came to the aid of Bhīma. Virāṭa leapt down from the chariot of Suçarman, seizing the mace of the latter, and ran in pursuit of him; Suçarman was seized by Bhīma, but set free by Yudhishtīra (IV, 33). The Pāṇḍavas passed the night on the field of battle honoured by Virāṭa. As proposed by Yudhishtīra, Virāṭa ordered messengers to proclaim the victory in the city. The messengers repaired to the city that very night, and at sunrise they proclaimed the victory at the city gates (IV, 34). Meanwhile Duryodhana, etc. (a), invaded the Matsya country and took away the kine. Hearing this, Bhūmīnījaya (i.e. Uttara), who had been left by the king in the empty city (IV, 35), and whose charioteer had been slain in a great battle, followed the advice of Kṛṣṇa (who had been instigated by Arjuna) and sent Uttarā (IV, 36), who prevailed upon Bṛhannalū (= Arjuna in disguise) to become the charioteer of Uttara. Uttarā and her maidens asked Arjuna to bring fine clothes for their dolls when he had vanquished the Kurus (IV, 37). Seeing the host of the Kurus, Uttara became agitated with fear and jumped down from the chariot and began to flee, but was seized by Arjuna and made to hold the reins, while Arjuna had to fight (IV, 38). Bhīshma, Droṇa, etc., suspected the comer to be Arjuna, and many portents were explained by Droṇa in that sense. Karna blamed Droṇa, and Duryodhana said that if it were Arjuna the Pāṇḍavas must go into exile for twelve more years (IV, 39). Having reached the çamī tree, Arjuna ordered Uttara to fetch the weapons of the Pāṇḍavas, including Gāṇḍīva, which were deposited there (IV, 40). Believing that a corpse had been tied up in the tree, Uttara refused, but as Arjuna said: "There are only bows in that tree and no corpse," he climbed up and unwrapped and untied the bows (IV, 41). Arjuna explained to him to whom the different bows belonged, first mentioning the Gāṇḍīva (c), which is honoured by the gods, the Dānavas, and the Gandharvas (IV, 42-43). He then revealed to Uttara that they were the Pāṇḍavas and confirmed it by telling his ten names (β) (IV, 44). Arjuna took off the bracelets from his arms, etc., recalled to his mind all his weapons, and twanged the Gāṇḍīva with a dreadful sound, whence the Kurus knew that he was Arjuna, then he comforted Uttara by mentioning his former exploits (γ) and his preceptors in arms (δ) (IV, 45). Having taken down the banner with the figure of a lion he set up his own flagstaff bearing the figure of an ape with a lion's tail, which was a celestial illusion (māyā) contrived by Viçva-karman himself, for as soon as he thought of the gift of Agni, Agni ordered the superhuman creatures to take their usual place on that banner, which then fell down from the air on his chariot (read rathe with B.). Droṇa concluded from various omens that it was Arjuna (IV, 46). Duryodhana repeated to Bhīshma, Droṇa, and Kṛpa, his and Karna's opinion, that Arjuna must have broken his pledge, and asked Bhīshma to calculate the time. Karna blamed Droṇa for praising Arjuna (IV, 47), and declared that he would throw Arjuna down from his chariot that very day (IV, 48). Kṛpa blamed Karna and warned him from fighting alone with Arjuna, mentioning his exploits (ε); they ought all to fight with Arjuna and not Karna alone (IV, 49). Açvatthāman blamed Karna for his vain boast and declared that he would not fight with Arjuna (IV, 50). Bhīshma tried to mediate between Açvatthāman and Kṛpa on one side and Karna on the other side; he was of opinion that fight they must, and therefore this was not the time for quarrel. "The Brāhmāstra and the Vedas are never to be seen combined anywhere else than in Droṇa (and Açvatthāman)." He was supported by Açvatthāman and Duryodhana. Droṇa said: "Let such arrangements be made that Arjuna may not be able to approach Duryodhana in battle, and that Duryodhana may not be captured by the foe" (IV, 51). Having calculated the time ("an excess of five months and twelve nights in thirteen years"), Bhīshma declared that the Pāṇḍavas had not broken the pledge. Duryodhana said: "I will not give back the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas." Bhīshma proposed that Duryodhana should proceed towards the capital with one-fourth of the army, and that one-fourth should escort the kine, while he, Droṇa, Karna, Açvatthāman, and Kṛpa should withstand the foes. This proposal was accepted; Bhīshma placed Droṇa in the centre, Açvatthāman on the left wing, Kṛpa on the right wing, and Karna in the van, and would himself stand in the rear (IV, 52). Droṇa recognized the top of Arjuna's banner, etc. Arjuna directed Uttara to the spot where Duryodhana was; the soldiers became so confounded that they could not even fly, and the kine turned back along the southern road (IV, 53). As Arjuna was advancing towards Duryodhana the Kurus fell upon him, especially Karna, who was supported by Citrasena, Saṅgrāmajit (the brother of Karna), Çatrusaha, Jaya, and Vikarna; Vikarna fled; Çatrunṭapa and many others were slain by Arjuna, so also Saṅgrāmajit; at last Karna took to flight (IV, 54). Duryodhana, etc., attacked Arjuna; Arjuna shot at Droṇa, Duḥsaha, Açvatthāman, Duḥçāsana, and Kṛpa, and wounded Bhīshma, Duryodhana, and Karna. Then Arjuna described to Uttara the banners, etc., of Kṛpa, Droṇa, Açvatthāman, Duryodhana, Karna, and Bhīshma (IV, 55). Indra, the gods, the Viçvas, the Açvins, the Maruts, the Yakshas, the Gandharvas, the Mahoragas, the Nāgas, the Rākshasas, the serpents, the Pitṛs, and the maharshis came to see the combat, likewise, sitting on the chariot of Indra, king Vasumanas, etc. (ζ); also Agni, Çiva, Soma, Varuṇa, Prajāpati, Dhātṛ, Vidhātṛ, Kubera, Yama, Alambusha, Ugrasena, Tumburu, etc., came there (IV, 56). Arjuna attacked Kṛpa, announced his name, and blew the Devadatta; at last Kṛpa was led away by his soldiers (IV, 57). Droṇa attacked Arjuna; Arjuna said: "I will not strike thee unless thou strikest me first"; with his own weapons Arjuna baffled the Aindra, Vāyavya, and Āgneya weapons, which were shot by Droṇa; a voice was heard in the sky applauding Droṇa; then Açvatthāman attacked Arjuna, which gave Droṇa an opportunity to leave the field (IV, 58). Açvatthāman cut off the string of the Gāṇḍīva and was applauded by the gods, and by Droṇa, Bhīshma, Karna, and Kṛpa. Arjuna attached a fresh string to the Gāṇḍīva. As Açvatthāman's arrows became exhausted Karna attacked Arjuna (IV, 59), who challenged him to a single combat and rebuked him, because he had fled after the slaughter of his younger brother. At last Karna, wounded, fled in a northern direction (IV, 60). Then Arjuna ordered Uttara to take him to Bhīshma; Uttara became afraid and was comforted by Arjuna (d), who enumerated some of his exploits and weapons. Duḥçāsana, Vikarna, Duḥsaha, and Vivimçati rushed towards Arjuna; Duḥçāsana fled; Vikarna fell down; Duḥsaha and Vivimçati were taken away by their warriors (IV, 61). At last the Kauravas fled (IV, 62); Duryodhana, Karna, and Duḥçāsana attempted in vain to defeat Arjuna (IV, 63). Then Bhīshma and Arjuna fought with the Prajāpatya, Aindra, Āgneya, Raudra, Kaubera, Vāruṇa, Yāmya, and Vāyavya weapons; the Gandharva Citrasena showed the two combatants to Indra, who showered celestial flowers down upon them;

at last Bhishma, wounded, lost consciousness and was led away by his charioteer (IV, 64). Duryodhana and then Vikarna attacked Arjuna; Vikarna run back and ascended the chariot of Vivimçati; Duryodhana was wounded and fled, and so did all the warriors (IV, 65). Stung by the censure of Arjuna, Duryodhana returned, and Karṇa, Bhishma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, Vivimçati, and Duḥśāsana rushed forwards to protect Duryodhana. Arjuna employed the weapon Sammohana which he had obtained from Indra, and blew his conch so that the Kurus were deprived of their senses. Then he caused Uttara to take away the white garments of Droṇa and Kṛpa, the yellow ones of Karṇa, and the blue ones of Duryodhana and Aṣvatthāman, but not those of Bhishma, because he had not been stupefied. Arjuna wounded Bhishma, who told Duryodhana to go back to his city, which they all did; Arjuna followed them for a while and worshipped Bhishma, Droṇa, Aṣvatthāman, and Kṛpa; then he, with an arrow, broke the crown of Duryodhana and blew the Devadatta. Then he ordered Uttara to turn back. The gods returned to their respective abodes (IV, 66). A large number of Kuru soldiers issuing from the forest stood before Arjuna with joined palms and were spared. Arjuna said to Uttara: "Do not eulogize the Pāṇḍavas, but say that the feat is thy own." Then he replaced the weapons on the śamī tree; the monkey ascended to the sky, together with the other creatures on the flagstaff, the illusion (māyā) melted away, and Uttara's own banner was replaced upon the chariot. Arjuna entered the city in the guise of Bṛhannalā, having sent the cowherds to announce the victory (IV, 67). Virāṭa entered his city, followed by the four Pāṇḍavas, and dispatched an army to protect Uttara, though Yudhishtira said that, protected by Bṛhannalā, he was able to vanquish even the gods, the Asuras, the Siddhas, and the Yakshas. Meanwhile the messengers of Uttara came and Virāṭa ordered the highways to be decorated, etc., and began to play at dice with Yudhishtira, who again repeatedly praised Bṛhannalā. Virāṭa struck Yudhishtira with a die, but the blood was prevented from falling on the ground and was washed away by Kṛṣṇā, who also, at the injunction of Yudhishtira, let Uttara enter alone, that Bṛhannalā should not see him bleeding. Uttara prevailed upon Virāṭa to ask Yudhishtira's pardon. When the bleeding had stopped, Bṛhannalā entered (IV, 68). Uttara said: "All this has been accomplished by a devaputra ('son of a deity') who then disappeared." Arjuna gave to Uttara the garments he had brought (IV, 69).

[Grdhra - gomāyu - samvāda(h)] ("the discourse between a vulture and a jackal"). § 653b (Āpaddh.): Bhīshma related: The young child of a brahman died and was taken to the burning-place; a vulture caused the lamenting kinsmen to leave the child, as the sun was soon to set, saying that the child could not be revived by their lingering. A jackal, black as a raven, rebuked them for not waiting till the sun had set, as the child might possibly revive. The vulture and the jackal alternately endeavoured to persuade them. The jackal mentioned that by Rāma's [i.e. Dāçarathi's] slaying the Çandra named Çambuka, a brahmana child was restored to life; similarly the son of R.-r. Çveta. The vulture said that if only Rudra, etc. (a), would grant him a boon, the child might come back to life, and mentioned the spirits and Y. and Rā., etc., who haunt the burning-place, while the jackal reminded them that it was here on this "quiet and peaceful" spot that the Pitṛs by thousands took leave of the world. The jackal and the vulture continued to dispute, exhausted with hunger and thirst, wishing to get opportunity of devouring the child. Then Çankara (i.e. Çiva) exhorted by his consort came, and, taking up a quantity of water in his hands, restored the child to life for a hundred years, and to the jackal and the vulture he granted a boon, in consequence of which their hunger was appeased. [Guruçishyasamvāda] ("discourse between a preceptor and his disciple"). § 782g. (Anugītāparvan): Kṛṣṇa said: Asked by his disciple "Whence am I? whence art thou?" etc., the preceptor said: This was declared by Brahmān himself to R.; it was known to the conclaves of Si. in the ancient kalpas. In days of old R. Brhaspati, etc. (8) assembled together for asking one another, tired with their acts; placing R. Āṅgīrasa at their head, they beheld, in the abode of Brahmān, Brahmān free from sin, and were instructed by him about how a good man should act, about Emancipation, etc. "Truth is the universe of being," light, ether, sun, wind, Indra and Prajāpati are not seen as long as one has not attained to Adhyātma; religion has faith (çraddhā) for its indication; the number of elements (tattva) are twenty-four and one more (XIV, 35). Brahmān discoursed on the city of nine gates, the three qualities, etc., the qualities belonging to darkness (birth as Cāṇḍālas, etc.); R., Mu., and D. become deluded, desirous of pleasure (XIV, 36). Brahmān discoursed on passion (XIV, 37) and sattva (XIV, 38); the qualities are not completely separated from one another, etc. (XIV, 39); from the unmanifest first sprang the great soul, the source of all intelligence, the source of all qualities, called Mahān ātmā, Viṣṇu, Jishṇu, Çambhu, Buddhi, etc., pervading everything in the universe, stationed in the heart of all, endued with minuteness, lightness, and affluence (prāpti); this is said to be the first creation (XIV, 40); the great (Mahān), who was first produced and called Ahankāra, is the second creation, the source of all creatures, a god, the creator of gods, etc. (XIV, 41); from Ahankāra was born the five great elements; the prāṇas, etc.; the eleven organs sprung from Ahankāra:—

ENTITY (bhūtas).	ON THE SELF (adhyātman).	AMONG OBJECTS (adibhūtan).	AMONG GODS (adhidēvān).
1. ether (ākāśa)	ear (grotra)	sound (śabda)	the Quarters (Dīçāḥ).
2. wind (māruḥ)	skin (teac)	objects of touch (spraśṭavya)	Lightning (Vidyut).
3. light (jyoti)	eye (cakṣuḥ)	form and colour (rūpa)	the Sun (Sūrya).
4. water (āpaḥ)	tongue (jihvā)	taste (rasa)	Soma .
5. earth (prthivī)	nose (ghrāṇa)	scent (gandha)	the Wind (Vāyu).

12.	egoism (ahankāra : sarvasamākrāraṇam)	consciousness of self (abhimāna)	Rudra .
13.	understanding (buddhi : śaśindriyavairiṇī)	what is to be understood (mantavyam)	Brahmān .

Three are the seats of all existent objects: land, water, and ether; the mode of birth is fourfold (from eggs, gorms, filth, or wombs) (specification); etc.; on the means of attaining to Brahmān; on the body; the emancipated one is Viṣṇu, etc. (9); † him praise brahmins, D., As., Y., Pç., P., bir's, Rā., Bh., and M.-r. († v. 1169) (XIV, 42); the kahatriya, elephant, lion, sheep, snake, bull, and male are of middle quality [i.e. rajas]; the nyagrodha, etc. (८) are the foremost among trees; Himavat, etc. (१) are the foremost among mountains; M. are the foremost of the gaṇas, etc. (९); [in v. 1201 it is Vāyu who resides in the skin and is employed in the perception of touch, etc.] (XIV, 43); the day was first, then arose the night, etc.; the months are said to begin with the bright fortnights; the constellations begin with Ṛavāṇa; the seasons with winter (śiśira), etc. (.) (XIV, 44); on the wheel of life (XIV, 45); on the duties that men should observe (XIV, 46); on renunciation, knowledge, and power (XIV, 47); on the different conceptions of Brāhman (a tree, a forest, unmanifest, etc.); it is impossible to attain to Puruṣa by any other means than goodness; some assert the unity of Kṣhetrajña and sattva; this is not correct; the relation of Puruṣa to sattva is like that of the gnat to the udumbara, or that of water-drops on the leaf of a lotus. The R. once more asked (XIV, 48) about the diversities of practice observed by men, and about the connection between the Kṣhetrajña and sattva (XIV, 49). Brahman, quoting what was said by a preceptor to a disciple, said that abstention from harming any creature is the foremost of all duties, and the relation between sattva and Kṣhetrajña (Puruṣa) is that of the object (vishaya) to the subject (vishayitva); or like that of the matter to the maker, or like that of a lamp (with oil and wick) to him who lights it; sattva is manifest, while Puruṣa is unmanifest; knowledge is indispensable for attaining to felicity; from pradhāna develops mahat, from mahat ahankāra, from ahankāra the five elements; the qualities of the elements are the following:—

	ether (space)	wind	light	water	earth
	smell	taste	touch	sound.
	1. agreeable	1. sweet	1. rough	1. śabja .	1. śabja .
	2. disagreeable	2. sour	2. cold	2. cold	2. cold
	3. sweet	3. pungent	3. hot	3. hot	3. hot
	4. sour	4. bitter	4. tender	4. tender	4. tender
	5. pungent	5. astringent	5. hard	5. hard	5. hard
	6. diffusive	6. saline	6. smooth	6. smooth	6. smooth
	7. compact		7. slippery	7. slippery	7. slippery
	8. oily		8. oily	8. agreeable.	8. agreeable.
	9. dry		9. painful	9. disagreeable.	9. disagreeable.
	10. clear		10. soft	10. compact.	10. compact.

Space (ether) is the highest of the elements > (i.e. above it is) ahankāra > buddhi > ātman (the soul) > the unmanifest avyaktaṁ > Puruṣa (XIV, 50). Brahman said: The body is called the carriage of Brāhman, on which the individual soul drives about; the senses are the steeds; the mind is the charioteer, called also the bhūtātman (the individual soul), because it is the ruler of the elements (bhūtāni); the reins are the buddhi, called also kṣhetrajña (the individual soul), because it "proclaims power." The order of the dissolution is: 1, the creatures; 2, their qualities; 3, the elements; D., men, G., P., As., and Rā. have all sprung from Nature (svabhāvataḥ), and not from actions, nor from a cause; [the elements are called] the brahmins, who are creators of the universe [and] are born here again and again; all that springs from them is dissolved in those very five great elements like billows in the ocean; [beyond] those elements that compose the universe (viśvaśrībhyaḥ tu bhūtebhyaḥ, i.e. the gross elements) are the five great elements (i.e. the subtle elements; read °bhūtas with B.), and higher than these is the way of the emancipated (read mukto with B.); Prajāpati created all this by the mind alone; in the same manner R. attained to [the status of] D. by the aid of penance; (the wonderful effects of penance, by which one may be cleansed from the most horrible sins, etc.; men, P., deities, etc., have been crowned with success by penance alone); different degrees of bliss after death (Prajāpati); the great highest region—mahāntaṁ lokam uttamaṁ; the unmanifest accumulation of happiness—sukhopasāyam avyaktaṁ; the unmanifest, i.e. the highest region of the great ones—avyaktaṁ mahāntaṁ lokam uttamaṁ, according as one performs acts with expectation, being full of egoism (ahankāra-samāyuktāḥ), or is devoid of selfishness (nirmamāḥ), and freed from egoism (nirahankṛtāḥ) through yoga; freed from darkness and passion and adhering only to goodness, one becomes released from every sin and creates all things: such a one should be known to be [perfect] kṣhetrajña: he who knows him knows the Veda; that which begins with the unmanifest and ends with the gross qualities (°viśeṣhāntaṁ), has ignorance for its indication; selfishness (mama) is death, the reverse (na mama) is the eternal [Brāhman]; the high-minded ancients never applaud action: by action a creature is born with body; the indication of tranquillity is like what takes place in a dream; this is the goal of the emancipated ones who are intent on knowledge. The preceptor said: Thus addressed by Brahman, Mu. acted accordingly and attained to felicity (lokam). Kṛṣṇa said: The pupil acted accordingly and then attained to emancipation (XIV, 51).

[Hamsakākiyopākhyāna(m)] ("the story of the crow and the swans"). § 606 (Karnap.): There lived on the other side of the ocean a rich raiṣya with many children, kind to all creatures. A crow lived upon the refuse of the dishes set before these children. The crow, becoming arrogant, came to disregard all birds. Once, certain swans, having their abodes in the Mānasa lake, came to that side of the ocean. The crow challenged their leader, saying that he would display 101 different kinds of motion, doing every 100 yojanas in a separate kind of motion: rising up and swooping down, etc. One of the swans said that they knew but that one kind of motion that all birds know, at which the assembled crows laughed aloud. The swans in vain tried to dissuade the crow. They began to fly. Beholding the diverse kinds of flight of the crow, the crows loudly rejoiced, while the swans laughed in mockery. For a moment the swan, with that one kind of slow motion, seemed to yield to the crow. As the swan flew westwards to the ocean, the crow was anxious and became almost senseless at not seeing any islands or trees whereon to perch when tired. At last the swan asked: "What is this kind of flight that thou hast now adopted? thou touchest the waters with thy wings and beak repeatedly." The crow suddenly fell down, and imploring the swan, prevailed upon him to take him on his back and carry him to the shore, and promised never to disregard others.

Hamsātman = Kṛṣṇa: XII, 1634.

Hamsavaktra, a warrior of Skanda. § 615u (Skanda): IX, 457, 2574.

Hamsī, a daughter of Bhagiratha. § 767 (Ānuṣāsanik.): XIII, 137a, 6270 (given to Kautsa).

Hamsikā, a celestial cow, daughter of Surabhi. § 564 (Mātaliyop.): V, 102, 3609 (in the southern quarter).

Hanūmad-Bhīma-samvāda(h) ("conversation between Hanumat and Bhīma"). § 425 (Bhīmakadalikhaṇḍapraveṇa): Hanumat said that he was the son of Vāyu with the wife of Keçarin, and the friend of the Sun's son Sugriva, who, together with Çakra's son Vālin, used to be waited upon by all monkeys; further, that Sugriva had been driven out by his brother, and dwelt for a long time with Hanumat at Rahyamūka, when Rāma Daçarathi, who was Viṣṇu in human shape, with his wife and younger brother resided in the Daṇḍaka forest, and the Rākṣasa Rāvaṇa carried away Sitā, Rāma's queen, from Janasthāna, assisted by the Rākṣasa Mārīca, in the form of a deer marked with gems and gold (III, 147). Rāma slew Vālin and installed Sugriva in the kingdom; Sugriva sent monkeys to inquire after Sitā, and according to the communications of the vulture Sampātī, Hanumat crossed the ocean, extending over 100 yojanas, saw Sitā in the abode of Rāvaṇa, burnt Lankā, and returned to Rāma. Rāma constructed a bridge across the deep, and, followed by myriads of monkeys, he slew Rāvaṇa, his brother, sons, and kindred, together with all the Rākṣasas, and installed the pious Rākṣasa chief Vibhishana in the kingdom in Lankā, and then returned with Sitā to his city Ayodhya, and was established in the kingdom. Rāma granted to Hanumat that he should live as long as the history of Rāma's deeds is remembered on earth. Rāma went to his own abode after having reigned 11,000 years. From that time all excellent objects of entertainment were, through the grace of Sitā, supplied to Hanumat, who constantly stayed there hearing the deeds of Rāma sung by Apsaras and Gandharvas (cf. v. 11, 323). He had obstructed this path of the gods to Bhīma with the view that none might defeat or curse him (III, 148).—§ 426: When Bhīma asked Hanumat to show him the form he had when crossing the ocean, Hanumat declared this to be impossible, as all things diminish according to the different yugas, even the Siddhas, gods, and great ṛṣis. Then he described the Kṛta-yuga (b) and the Tretā (q.v., § 427), Dvāpara (q.v., § 428), and Kaliyuga (q.v., § 429).—§ 430: Hanumat was prevailed upon to grant the request of Bhīma (see § 426), and showed himself as great as the Vindhya or the Mainaka mountain, and said that he might become as long as he wished; he had himself been able to slay Rāvaṇa, but would not obscure the glory of Rāma. He pointed out to Bhīma the way to the Saugandhika-vana and the garden of Kubera, which was guarded by Yakṣas and Rākṣasas, and warned him against plucking the flowers himself, delivering a discourse upon the duties of the four castes, etc. (III, 150).

Hanumat or Hanūmat, name of a monkey, the son of Vāyu (the Wind). § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 453.—§ 424

(Bhīmakadulikhṇḍapraveṣa): III, 146, 11134 (kapih, obstructed the way to Heaven to Bhīmasena), 11138 (vānaraḥ), 11155, (11156); 147, 11170 (Vāyutanayaḥ), (11171), (11173), 11175 (iva), (11176), 11176, 11177 (bhrātā mama—i.e. Bhīmasena's—guṇaṣṭāgḥo buddhisattva-bālānṛitah | Rāmāyane 'līkhyātah ṣṛīmān vānarapungasaḥ), 11181, (11182), 11183 (Bhīmasena could not even move the tail of H.).—§ 425 (Hanūmat-Bhīmasamv.): III, 147, 11192 (Hanūmat tells his name and his story to Bhīmasena, cf. § 531 foll.), 11193 (begotten by Vāyu on the wife of Keṣarin); 148, (11201).—§ 426 (do.): III, 149, 11225, (11229), (11234) (described the different yugas to Bhīmasena).—§ 430 (do.): III, 150, 11272 (showed his former shape to Bhīmasena), 11275 (tad adbhutam mahāraudram Vinḍhya-parvatasaṁnibham . . . H^oo varshma), 11276, 11281 (plava-gottamaḥ).—§ 431 (Saugandhikāharana): III, 161, 11329, 11332 (promised to stand on the flagstaff of Arjuna—Vijayasya dhvajasthaḥ; cf. V, 2222), 11335.—§ 531 (Rāmopākhyānap.): III, 280, 16102 (counsellor of the monkey king Sugrīva), 16115 (Anilātmaḥ), 16125.—§ 534 (Hanūmatpratyāgamana): III, 282, 16227 (°pramukhah . . . plavaṅgamah, despatched to seek Sītā), 16229, 16263 (reached Lāṅkā and consoled Sītā).—§ 535 (Setubandhana): III, 283, 16284 (Mārutātmaḥ, commanded the monkey force).—§ 538 (Kumbhakarnāgaragamana): III, 286, 16385 (Mārutātmaḥ), 16389 (Pavanātmaḥ), 16392 (Mārutātmaḥ, slew the Rākshasa Dhūmrāksha).—§ 539 (Kumbhakarnādivadha): III, 287, 16434 (Mārutātmaḥ, slew the Rākshasa Vajravega).—§ 541 (Indrajidvadhā): III, 289a, 16468, (β), 16477.—§ 542 (Rāvaṇavadhā): III, 290a, 16500.—§ 543 (Rāmābhisheka): III, 291, 16576 (shall live as long as Rāma's fame), 16591 (sent as messenger from Rāma to Bharata).—§ 561h (Arjuna): V, 56, 2222 (Mārutātmaḥ, had promised to Bhīmasena to place an image of himself on the standard of Arjuna, cf. III, 11332).—§ 599 (Jayadrathavadhāp.): VII, 139, 5777 (°ān iva parvatam, sc. udyamiya, cf. the note of PUR.).

Hanūmatpratyāgamana ("the returning of Hanūmat").

§ 534: Rāma and Lakshmaṇa were dwelling on the mountain Mālyavat. Rāma sent Lakshmaṇa to Kishkindhyā to threaten Sugrīva. Sugrīva, however, said that he had despatched monkeys in all directions to find out Sītā. After a month those who had been sent to the north, the east, and the west returned. After two months Hanūmat, Aṅgada, etc., returned from the south, after having pillaged Madhuvana (β). Hanūmat told that in a cavern of the palace of Maya the ascetic Prabhāvatī had shown them the way; on the shore they had seen the mountains Sahya, Malaya, and Daridura, then they had met Sampāti, the brother of Jaṭāyu(s) (α), and had informed him of everything; Sampāti then had directed them to Lāṅkā (δ), whereafter Hanūmat had crossed the ocean and slain the Rākshasī of the water, and had been recognized by Sītā from the words of Avindhya; Sītā had given him a jewel as a credential and told him, as a token, that Rāma on the mountain Citrakūṭa had shot a blade of grass at a crow; Hanūmat then had caused himself to be seized by the soldiers of Rāvaṇa, and set fire to Lāṅkā.

Harāṇāharana. § 11 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 363 (i.e. Harāṇāharanaparvan).

[Harāṇāharanaparvan] ("the section relating to the handing over the gift of honour," the 17th of the minor parvas of the Mbhr.). § 253: Kṛṣṇa said that Arjuna had not insulted their family, but had rather enhanced their respect, and prevailed upon them that they, by conciliation, brought Arjuna back to Dvārakā, where he was united in marriage with Subhadrā and passed a whole year. The last time of his exile he passed in Pushkara. After the twelve years were complete he came back to Khāṇḍavaprastha. Draupadī at first was jealous, but then embraced Subhadrā. Kṛṣṇa visited them at Indraprastha with Rāma, Akrura Dānapati (the senapati of the Vṛshnis), Anādhrṣṭi, Uddhava (a disciple of Bṛhaspati himself), Satyaka and Sātyaki, and Kṛtavarma Sātva, and Pradyumna, Çāmba, Niçāṭha, Çāṅku, Cārudeśha, Jhillin, Viprthu, Sāraṇa, Gada, etc., bringing with them many nuptial presents. Yudhishtira sent the twins out to receive them. Kṛṣṇa gave them 10,000 kine from the country of Mathurā, and Bālrika horses as kanyādhana, etc. Rāma gave Arjuna as a wedding present (pañigrahanika) 1,000 elephants. Having spent many days in sports and merriment there, the Vṛshnis returned to Dvāravati with Rāma in the van, carrying with them the gems that had been given them by Yudhishtira. But Kṛṣṇa remained with Arjuna at Indraprastha, and they went a-hunting over the borders of the Yamunā. Subhadrā brought forth Abhimanyu, so called because he was fearless (abhi) and wrathful (manyumat, v. 8027). Upon his birth Yudhishtira gave away 10,000 kine and nishkas to the brahmanas. The child became the favourite of Vasudeva, etc., and acquired from his father the Dhanurveda (β).—Pāñcali (Kṛṣṇa, v. 8045) also obtained five sons (see § 159): Prativindhya, Sutasoma, Çrutakarman, Çātānika, Çrutasoma. They were born each at the interval of one year. Their jātakarma, cūḍa, and upanayana were performed by Dhaumya. After having studied the Vedas they acquired from Arjuna knowledge of all weapons celestial and human (I, 221).

Hemakara = Çiva (1000 names¹).

Hemakūṭa. § 390b (Tirthayātrāp.): On the mountain H. the utterance of words (so PCB., who follows the various reading cited by Nil., "vācā yatra bhavan," instead of "vātā-baddha bhavan") caused the gathering of clouds and stones by thousands. There the recitation of the sacred scriptures was heard, but nobody was seen; in the evening and the morning there was seen fire, and biting flies would interrupt the austerities. Lomaça explained that formerly on this Rṣhabhakūṭa (i.e. Hemakūṭa) dwelt a great and resentful ṛṣi, who was many hundred years old, and was named P¹-bha. When practising austerities he had been spoken to by others, and in wrath he ordered the mountain to throw stones on him who should utter any word there, and forbade the wind to make any noise. Therefore, as soon as a man utters any word here he is forbidden by a roaring cloud. Formerly, when the gods came to the Nandā, many men came to see them, but the gods with Indra at their head did not like to be seen, and therefore they rendered the spot inaccessible by raising obstructions in the form of mountains, and from that day onwards men could not see that hill, far less ascend it. Lomaça further said: "Here all the gods performed the best sacrifices, and the marks thereof may be seen to this day, the grass resembling kuça grass, and many trees resembling yūpa; the gods and ṛṣis dwell there to this day, and it is their fire which is seen in the evening and the morning. By bathing here one's sins are destroyed": III, 110, 9929 (parvatam, near the River Nandā and Aparanandā, visited by Yudhiṣṭhira, etc., on his tirthayātrā).—§ 459 (Mārkaṇḍeyas.): III, 188, 12917 (parvatam, seen by Mārkaṇḍeya in the stomach of Nārāyaṇa).—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 6β, 198 (the second of the six varṣhaparvatāḥ of Jambudvīpa), 202 (beyond H. lies Harivarsha), 236 (identified with Kailāsa, q.v.), (θ), 246 (inhabited by Guhyakas).

[Hidimbavadhaparvan] ("the section relating to the killing of Hidimba," the 9th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.) (cf. Hidimba). § 214 (cf. III, 553 ff.): Not far from that place dwelt on a çāla tree the Rākṣasa Hidimba, a cannibal with eight long and sharp-pointed teeth, etc. Scenting the odour of man, he sent his sister Hidimbā to slaughter them and bring them unto him. She fell in love with Bhīma, and, assuming a beautiful form, she asked him to become her husband, and promised to rescue him and his brothers and mother from her brother, but Bhīma ("neither men nor Gandharvas, nor Yakṣas are able to bear my might," v. 5960) refused to awaken them (I, 152). Seeing that his sister did not return soon enough, Hidimba proceeded quickly to the spot, and, abusing his sister, he rushed at her, but was seized by Bhīma and dragged to a distance, lest his yells should awaken the brothers of Bhīma; fighting they broke down the trees, etc., and at those sounds the Pāṇḍavas woke up with their mother, and saw Hidimbā sitting before them (I, 153). She made herself and her love for Bhīma known to them. Arjuna offered to assist Bhīma; but Bhīma refused. Arjuna then said: "The morning twilight is about to set in; during the twilights Rākṣasas become stronger; kill him without delay." Then Bhīma threw the Rākṣasa to the ground, and he, dying, sent forth a terrible yell; then he doubled up his body and broke it in the middle. Arjuna thought there was a town not far off. Thence they proceeded, followed by Hidimbā (I, 154). Bhīma would also have slain Hidimbā, but was prevented by Yudhisṭhira. It was agreed upon, that she should have Bhīma for her husband, until she got a son, sporting with him during the day, but bringing him back every evening. She then flew away with him, and sported with him on mountains, etc., until she had brought forth (the Rākṣasa women bring forth the very day they conceive (v. 6077) a bald-headed son, whom they, on account of his baldness, called Ghaṭotkaca (ghaṭo hānyotkaca iti, v. 6079), who developed into a young man the very hour he was born, excelled all Piçācas, etc., in strength, and soon acquired high proficiency in all weapons. Hidimbā then went away; and also Ghaṭotkaca, who promised that he would come when wanted for business, went away northwards. It was Indra who had created Ghaṭotkaca as an antagonist for Karna, in consideration of the latter's lance (I, 155). The Pāṇḍavas proceeded from forest to forest in the garb of ascetics, studying the Brāhma Veda, and the Vedāṅgas, and the nitiçāstra, through the countries of the Matsyas, Trigartas, Pāncālas, and Kīcakas. Then they met Vyāsa, who comforted them and led them into the town of Ekacakrā to the house of a brahman. He ordered them to wait here, till he came back, and then went away (I, 156).

Hṛda, a serpent. § 793 (Mausalap.): XVI, 4^γ, †120.

Hradapraveçana(m) ("Duryodhana's entering the lake") § 10 (Parvasaṅg.): I, 2, 346 (parva, i.e. Hrada-praveçaparvan).

[Hradapraveçaparvan] ("the section containing Duryodhana's entering the lake," the 81st of the minor parvas of Mbh.; cf. Hradapraveçana). § 612: The followers of Çakuni attacked the Pāṇḍavas; Arjuna and Bhīmasena came to the rescue of Sahadeva; Arjuna slew them; Duryodhana rallied the remnants of his chariots (many hundreds), etc., and urged them against the Pāṇḍavas and Dhṛṣṭadyumna; they were exterminated in a moment by the Pāṇḍavas and the *Sṛñjaya*s. Only Duryodhana remained alive. Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Sañjaya recounted the numbers of the remnants of the Pāṇḍava army. Duryodhana abandoned his slain steeds and fled away on foot without a companion, towards a lake, taking up his mace, recalling the words of Vidura. The Pāṇḍavas (headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna) with Arjuna (with Gāṇḍīva) baffled the Kurus. In Duryodhana's army no great chariot-warrior was alive save Açratthāman, etc. (a). Urged by Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Sātyaki was about to slay Sañjaya; but Vyāsa came and caused him to be let off alive. He met with Duryodhana, whom he told the state of things, and who asked him to inform Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Then Duryodhana, having charmed the waters, entered the lake. Sañjaya then met with Açratthāman, etc. (a), and informed them; they fled away, at sight of the Pāṇḍavas, to the Kuru camp, taking Sañjaya up in the chariot of hṛpa. The sun had set a little before. The outposts of the camp wept aloud. The old men proceeded towards the city with the princesses (description); also the camp-guards fled towards the city, and so did also the cowherds, etc., from fear of Bhīmasena. Yuyutsu reflected (β). With the permission of Yudhishtira he supervised the removal of the ladies. The sun was setting. Having entered Hastinapura with the ladies, he informed Vidura (γ); urged by Vidura, he passed that night in his own abode, while Vidura went to the cheerless mansion of Dhṛtarāṣṭra (IX, 29). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (δ), Sañjaya related: The Pāṇḍavas wandered over the field in search of Duryodhana; tired, they took rest in their camp with all their soldiers. Then Açratthāman, etc. (a) proceeded towards the lake and urged Duryodhana to fight with them against Yudhishtira. Duryodhana said that he would rest for that night and fight the next morning. Açratthāman swore to slay the Pāṇḍavas and all the Pāñcālas in this night. Certain hunters who used every day to procure a basketful of meat for Bhīmasena overheard the conversation between Duryodhana and Açratthāman, etc. (a), and informed Bhīmasena. The Pāṇḍavas all (Arjuna, etc. (α) with Yudhishtira) started towards the lake (Draupiyana); hearing the noise caused by them Açratthāman, etc. (a), took leave from Duryodhana and went away, and stopped under a banyan (IX, 30). Kṛṣṇa advised Yudhishtira to slay Duryodhana by putting forth his own powers of illusion (ξ). Yudhishtira tauntingly addressed Duryodhana for having fled from battle (η); Duryodhana said that he had entered the lake not from fear, but in order to take rest. Yudhishtira asked Duryodhana to come out immediately and fight his foes. He answered that his kingdom might be taken by his foes, his own desire being to enter the woods and retire from the world (θ); Yudhishtira taunted him for such an answer, refusing to take the kingdom in gift from one who was unable to retain it by might (IX, 31).

Indralokābhigamana ("Arjuna's journey to the world of Indra"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 321 (parva, i.e. Indralokābhigamanaparvan).

[Indralokābhigamanaparvan] ("the section relating to Arjuna's journey to the world of Indra," the 34th of the minor parvas of Mhbhr.). § 335: After the Lokapālas had gone away, Arjuna began to think of the chariot of Indra, which, guided by Mātali, came down full of swords, missiles, maces, thunderbolts, etc. (description), and great Nāgas with fiery mouths, and drawn by 10,000 horses of golden hue, and with the flagstaff Vaijayanta (described). Mātali, descending, invited him to ascend the chariot, as Indra waited to behold him, surrounded by gods, ṛṣhis, Gandharvas, and Apsarases. As that chariot cannot be obtained even by hundreds of rājasūyas and horse-sacrifices, and as even gods and Dānavas are not competent to ride in it, and as he that has no ascetic merit is not competent even to see or touch it, Arjuna first let Mātali ascend it and control the horses. Then he purified himself in the Gaṅgā, repeated his prayers (jpyam), gratified the Pitṛs, and bade farewell to the Mandara mountain (b). Then he ascended, in the chariot, through the sky and beheld thousands of vimānas of extraordinary beauty; there was no sun or moon or fire, but they blazed in light of their own, generated by virtue and ascetic merit; and the stars, which from earth look small in consequence of their distance, but are very large, were seen by him in their places; and rājāṛṣhis who had attained siddhi (siddhāḥ), and heroes fallen in battle, and those that had obtained heaven by tapas; and Gandharvas, and Guhyakas, and ṛṣhis, and Apsarases. Mātali explained to him that the stars were virtuous persons (sukṛtinaḥ) stationed in their respective places (dhiśnyeshu). At the gates he beheld Airāvata with four tusks equal to Kailāsa. Continuing along the path of the Siddhas, he passed through the regions (lokān) of [virtuous] kings, and thus passing through Svargaloka he beheld Amarāvatī (b), the city of Indra (III, 42).—§ 336: When Arjuna had entered the city, praised by Apsarases, Gandharvas, Siddhas, great ṛṣhis, and gods, he, at the request of Indra, went to the large starry way (nakṣatramārga) named Suraviṭhi, where he met with the Sādhyas, Viçvas, Maruts, Açvins, Ādityas, Vasus, Rudras, Brahmarṣhis, Rājāṛṣhis with Dilīpa at their head, Tumburu, Nārada, Hāha, and Hāhā. Then he beheld Indra, eulogized by Gandharvas headed by Viçvāvasu, etc., and was seated on Indra's own seat; and Gandharvas, headed by Tumburu, sang to them, and thousands of Apsarases (enumeration of seventeen) (a) danced there (III, 43).—§ 337: The gods and Gandharvas offered him arghya, etc., and caused him to enter the palace of Indra. There he received Indra's weapons, the thunderbolt (vajra) and lightning (açantiḥ). At the request of Indra he dwelt there for five years, and learned the dance and music of the Gandharvas from Citrāsena, whom Indra gave him as a friend, but he was longing for his brothers and Kuntī and thirsting for revenge (III, 44).—§ 338: In the beginning, seeing that the eyes of Arjuna were fixed upon Urvāçī, Indra despatched Citrāsena to Urvāçī, who gladly consented to choose Arjuna (b) for her lover (III, 45). Urvāçī related to Arjuna that as he had looked on her only in a solemn assembly of celestials held on account of his coming, where the Rudras, Ādityas, Açvins, Vasus, Maharṣhis, Rājāṛṣhis, Siddhas, Caraṇas, Yakṣas, and Mahoragas (i.e. great serpents) were present, and the Gandharvas played the viṇās, and the Apsarases danced, Indra had caused Citrāsena to send her to him, and that she was herself in love with him. Arjuna declared that he regarded her as the wife of his guru, and that he had been gazing at her because she was the mother of the Paurava race. She replied that the sons and grandsons of Puru's race, that had come thither in consequence of ascetic merit, did all sport with the Apsarases without incurring any sin. But Arjuna swore that he regarded her as his mother. She then cursed him, saying that he should have to pass his time among females as a dancer and destitute of manhood, and then went away. Indra told him that this would come to pass in the thirteenth year of their exile, when they would live unknown to all, but having passed one year thus he would regain his manhood. The desire of the man that listens to this history of Arjuna never runs after lustful ends, etc. (III, 46).—§ 339: One day the brahmarṣhi Lomaça in the course of his wanderings went to the abode of Indra. As Lomaça within himself wondered how Arjuna, being a kṣatriya, had attained the seat of Çakra, who was worshipped by the gods themselves, Çakra, knowing his thoughts, explained to him who Arjuna (b) really was; that moreover the Asuras, the sons of Danu, named the Nivātakavacas, who dwell in Pātala, proud of a boon they had acquired, were planning the destruction of the gods, and could not be slain by others than either Kṛṣṇa (c) or Arjuna; but Madhusūdana (i.e. Kṛṣṇa) should not be urged when the task was insignificant, lest his energy should consume the whole universe; therefore Arjuna should slay them. At the request of Indra, seconded by Arjuna, Lomaça went to the Kāmyaka wood to Yudhiṣṭhira in order to bring him news about Arjuna and recommend him to visit the tirthas, and follow him and protect him from the Rākṣasas (d) (III, 47).—§ 340: As Dhṛtarāṣṭra learnt from Dvaipāyana of Arjuna's arrival and stay at Indra's abode, he expressed his anxiety to Sañjaya (III, 48). Conversation of Sañjaya and Dhṛtarāṣṭra about Arjuna's encounter with Çiva in the guise of a Kirāta, etc. (III, 49).—§ 341: During the five years of Arjuna's absence the Pāṇḍavas fed themselves and 10,000 śātaka brahmins, some with and some without fire, by killing deer, Yudhiṣṭhira going towards the east, Bhīma towards the south, and the twins towards the west and north (III, 50).—§ 342: Having heard of the way of life of the Pāṇḍavas, Dhṛtarāṣṭra expressed his anxiety before Sañjaya, fearing Bhīma with his iron (çaiḥya) mace, etc. Sañjaya commemorated how Kṛṣṇa, Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Virāṭa, Dhṛṣṭakṣu, and the Kaikayas had visited the Pāṇḍavas in the Kāmyaka wood, whose conversations Sañjaya had learnt through spies and formerly told Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Sañjaya further related that Kṛṣṇa had consented to become the charioteer of Arjuna (enumeration of kings seen by Kṛṣṇa at the rājasūya) and to assist the Pāṇḍavas in the battle, together with Rāma, Akrūra, Gada, Čamba, Pradyumna, Āhuka, Dhṛṣṭadyumna, and the son of Čiçupāla, and Yuyu-dhāna, and the Kaikōya and Pāñcāla princes and the Matsya king, and Kṛṣṇa had declared that Yudhishtira should, along with his brothers living at Hastinapura, rule the earth (III, 51).

[Indra - Mataṅga - samvāda(h)] ("the conversation between Indra and Mataṅga"). § 735b (Ānuçāsanik.): Bhishma said: Once a brahman obtained a son named Mataṅga, who, though procreated by a person of a different order, had, however, the rites of infancy and youth performed according to the ordinances laid down for brahmins. His father, desiring to perform a sacrifice, ordered him to collect the articles, and he set out riding in a car drawn by a young ass, that bore away the car to its mother; Mataṅga repeatedly struck the animal with his goad on its nose; but the old she-ass consoled it, saying, "A Cāṇḍāla it is that is driving thee; there is no severity in a brahman." Asked by Mataṅga, the she-ass revealed to him that his father was a Čūdra following the profession of a barber, who begat him upon a brahman woman excited with desire; "thou art, therefore, a Cāṇḍāla by birth." Mataṅga returned home, told his father what he had heard, retired to the forest, and began to undergo the austere penances in order to acquire the status of a brahman, so that he scorched the very deities. Indra came and offered him boons, but the status of a brahman, he said, could not be won by penances (XIII, 27). Mataṅga then stood for 100 years on one foot. Indra came once more and said: "From the order of brute life one attains to the state of humanity; if born as a human being, one is sure to take birth as a Pukkaça or a Cāṇḍāla; after 1,000 years one attains to the status of a Čūdra; then after 30,000 years that of a Vaiçya; after a period that is sixty times longer, that of a kshatriya; after a period that is sixty times longer than this, to that of a fallen brahman; after a period 200 times as long, to that of a brahman living by the profession of arms; after a period 300 times as long, to that of a brahman reciting the Gāyatrī and sacred mantras; after a period 400 times as long, to that of a brahman conversant with the entire Vedas and the scriptures" (XIII, 28). Mataṅga then practised austere penances, standing on one foot for 1,000 years in yoga-meditation. Indra once more came and said the same. Mataṅga then repaired to Gayā, and there passed 300 years on one foot in yoga, and was reduced to only skin and bones, and dropped down on the ground from sheer exhaustion. Indra came quickly; now Mataṅga accepted the boons that he should be celebrated as chandodeva, and obtain the worship of all women, and his fame should become unrivalled in the three worlds (XII, 29).

[Indravijaya(h)] ("the victory of Indra"). § 555: Questioned by Yudhishtira about the misery endured by Indra and Çacī, Çalya related: Once the Prajūpati Tvashṭr, from antipathy to Indra, created a son who had three heads (one for reading the Vedas; the second for drinking wine; with the third he looked as if he were about to absorb the four quarters), called Viçvarūpa. Beholding his austerities, Indra became alarmed, and in vain caused Apsarasas to tempt him; then he slew him with his thunderbolt (thinking, "I shall afterwards perform some religious ceremony"), but was yet afraid of his appearance, and prevailed upon a carpenter to cut off the heads (promising, "in sacrifices men will give thee the head of the sacrificial animal as thy share"); out flew birds—(1) partridges, (2) sparrows and hawks, (3) quails. Then Tvashṭr created Vṛtra, who swallowed up Indra. The gods created Jyṁbhikā ("yawning"); Vṛtra yawned (therefore yawn attaches itself to the living breath of animated beings), and Indra emerged. Tvashṭr strengthened Vṛtra; Indra returned; the gods consulted with the munis, and sitting on Mount Mandara, they thought of Vishṇu (V, 9). Indra, with D. and R., repaired to Vishṇu (b), who taught them, with R. and G., to make eternal friendship between Indra and Vṛtra ("I may not be killed either by what is dry or wet, stone, wood, weapons, by day or night, by Indra or D.," said Vṛtra). Indra then slew him in the evening with froth blended with the thunderbolt, in which Vishṇu had entered. D., G., Y., Rū., M.-U., and R. glorified Indra. But Indra was overpowered by falsehood (anṛta) and brahmanicide (brahmahatyā), and became bereft of his consciousness, and lay concealed in water; the earth became treeless, the rivers were interrupted, the rains ceased (V, 10). Then R. and D. (also P. and G., ch. 16) crowned Nahusha as king of D., giving him their tapas: "whatever being may stand within thy sight—D., Dū., Y., Rū., P., G., Bh.—thou shalt absorb his power." Nahusha then assumed a sensual turn of mind, amusing himself with Aps. and devakanyāḥ and Viçvāvasu, Nārada, G., and the six seasons, in Nandana, and on Kailāsa, Himavat, Mandara, Çveta, Sahya, Mahendra, Malaya, etc. He ordained that Çacī should wait upon him. Çacī (c) repaired to Bṛhaspati, who promised soon to unite her with Indra (V, 11). Nahusha became enraged; the earth, with As., G., K., M.-U., trembled;

Nahusha reminded of Indra's behaviour towards Ahalyā (d), etc.; at last the gods promised to bring him Çacī; but Bṛhaspati, as a brahman, would not abandon her, quoting a saying of Brahman (e); he told her to ask for time from Nahusha, and so did the gods, led by Agni (V, 12). Çacī obtained the boon from Nahusha, and returned to Bṛhaspati. D., with Agni, repaired to Vishṇu, who said: "Let Indra offer sacrifice to me; having performed the horse-sacrifice, he will regain his dignity." D. and R. and Bṛhaspati proceeded to the spot where Indra was, performed a horse-sacrifice, and divided the brahmahatyā among trees and rivers and mountains and earth and women; and Indra was free from fever, but vanished again from fear of Nahusha. Çacī worshipped Niçā (Night), who caused Upaçruti to appear, and Çacī prayed to Upaçruti (V, 13). Upaçruti, followed by Çacī, crossed the heavenly groves and many mountains and came to the northern side of Himavat, and thence to the sea; in an island there was a large lake with an assemblage of lotuses; there they found Indra in the fibres of a lotus-stalk, and, praising him, Çacī implored his help against Nahusha (V, 14). Indra said that Nahusha had been strengthened by the R. with the merits of offerings to D. and P. Çacī should tell Nahusha to visit her on a vehicle borne by R. Nahusha consented. Çacī prevailed upon Bṛhaspati to find out Indra, which he did by means of a sacrifice, prevailing upon Agni to search for him. Agni came back within the twinkling of an eye, having searched everywhere except in the waters, which he dared not enter ("fire rose from water, the kahatriya caste from the brāhmaṇa caste, and iron from stone; the power of these, which can penetrate all other things, has no operation upon the sources from which they sprang") (V, 15). Bṛhaspati praised Agni (f) and strengthened him with hymns of the Veda; Agni then found out Indra (cf. ch. 14), and soon returned and informed Bṛhaspati. This came with D.-r. and G., and praised Indra by referring to his former deeds (that he had killed the great Asura Namuci and the Asura Çambara and Vala and Vṛtra, as supra). Indra increased little by little, and having assumed his original form he grew strong, and asked what business yet remained, as he had killed Viçvarūpa and Vṛtra. Bṛhaspati told him of Nahusha, who had been strengthened by the power of the D.-r., etc. (v. ch. 11), and how Nahusha, carried by M.-r., journeyed from world to world. Lp. Kubera and Yama Vaivasvata and Soma and Varuṇa came and rejoiced that Viçvarūpa and Vṛtra had been killed, and they and Agni promised him their assistance against Nahusha on the condition that they and Agni should have their shares in sacrifices, and that Kubera (g), Yama (h), and Varuṇa (i) should this day be crowned along with Indra (V, 16). While Indra, with Lp. and D., was considering the means of slaying Nahusha, the M.-r. Agastya came and rejoiced that Viçvarūpa and Vṛtra had been killed, and related how Nahusha had been hurled from heaven (Svarga). The D.-r. and B.-r., weary with carrying him, had questioned him if certain mantras (prokṣhaṇa gāvāṃ) pronounced by Brahman (so B.) were authentic (pramāṇam), to which Nahusha, bewildered by the dark principle (tamas), had answered in the negative; R. reproached him, as M.-r. had formerly declared them to be authentic. Nahusha touched Agastya's head with his foot, and instantly lost his power and luck (çrī), and was agitated with fear. Then Agastya cursed him: "Fall thou from heaven, the effect of all thy good deeds (puṇya) has been exhausted; for 10,000 years thou shalt be a snake upon earth; then thou mayet come back to Svarga." D., M.-r., P., Y., Sp. (bhujagāḥ), Rā., G., devakanyāḥ, and the bands of Aps., and tanks, rivers, mountains, and the sea came and rejoiced (V, 17). Indra, glorified by G. and Aps., mounted Airāvata. Agni, the M.-r., Brhaspati, Yama, Varuṇa, and Kubera accompanied him. Indra went to the three worlds with D., G., and Aps., and was praised by Aṅgiras (i.e. Brhaspati?) with hymns of the Atharvaveda. Then he granted Atharvāṅgiras (= Aṅgiras) the boon that his name would be connected with this Veda and that he would get a share in sacrifices. United with Čaoi he protected the world virtuously (V, 18).

Indriya(m) sarvadehinām = Čiva (1000 names²).

Indrota, a brahman, descendant of Čunaka. § 652 (Āpaddh.): XII, 150, 5595 (Čaunako viprah). — § 652b (Indrota-Pārikahitiya): XII, 150, 5601 (Čaunakam); 152, 5672 (instructed king Janamejaya Pārikshit and assisted him in his horse-sacrifice).

[Indrota-Pārikahitiya(m)] ("the narrative of Indrota and Janamejaya Pārikshit"). § 652b (Āpaddh.): Bhishma said: There was, in days of yore, a king Pārikshit (! so B.; C. °rī°) Janamejaya; from want of judgment he became guilty of killing a brahman; then all the brahmins, with his priests, abandoned him; burning day and night with regret, the king retired into the woods; deserted by his subjects also, and consumed by repentance, he underwent the most rigid austerities. In order to purify himself of the sin of brahmanicide he interrogated many brahmins, and wandered from country to country over the whole earth. One day he met Indrota Čaunaka, who rebuked him for his brahmanicide and reminded him of the messengers of Yama in the abode of Yama (XII, 150). Janamejaya meekly listened to the reproof, saying that he was much afraid of Yama; he knew that, according to the Vedas, wretches like himself had forfeited all claim to the respect of the world, and had after death to dwell in hell like Pulindas and Čabaras (so C. and B.; PCR. Khasas), and he sought instruction from Indrota, who told him to repent and, knowing the Vedas, etc., act in such a way that the brahmins might not be angry with him; Čaunaka said that his kinsmen and friends would call him sinful because he instructed Janamejaya. Janamejaya swore never again to injure the brahmins (XII, 151). Indrota discoursed to the repentant king on the means of cleansing himself, quoting a verse sung by Yayāti about the sacredness of Kurukshetra, etc. (α), and recommending him to go to Mahāsaras, etc. (β), quoting also a saying of Manu and a verse of Satyavat. Mahāsaras, etc. (γ), are so sacred that one guilty of feticide becomes cleansed at even 100 yojanas from them. Manu has said that by diving in water after thrice reciting the Aghamarshaṇa [mantras] (v. the note of PCR., p. 498), one reaps the fruits of the final bath in a horse-sacrifice. The gods and Asuras in days of yore were instructed by M.-r. Brhaspati, the preceptor of the gods, how one should cleanse himself from sin. Indrota then assisted Janamejaya, cleansed of his sins, in the horse-sacrifice (XII, 152).

Jalapradānika, adj. ("relating to the gift of water to the deceased"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 348 (°m parva, i.e. Jalapradānikaparvan).

[Jalapradānikaparvan] ("the section relating to the gift of water to the deceased," the 85th of the minor parvas of the Mhbhr.: cf. Jalapradānika). § 618: Janamejaya inquired of Vaiçampāyana as to what Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. (a), did after the death of Duryodhana. Dhṛtarāṣṭra's grief; Sañjaya comforted him, and suggested the performance of the obsequious rites of the fallen heroes. Dhṛtarāṣṭra lamented (B); Sañjaya rebuked and consoled him (γ). Vidura addressed Dhṛtarāṣṭra (XI, 1) and comforted him (δ) (XI, 2); charmed by Vidura's discourse, Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked him to continue his observations on the vanity of human life; Vidura continued his discourse, and described human life as it runs (XI, 3) from the very beginning (XI, 4), comparing it to a wilderness abounding with dangers (XI, 5), explaining the comparison according to the religion of Moksha (XI, 6); asked by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Vidura continued his discourse on human life (XI, 7). Dhṛtarāṣṭra swooned away, but was comforted by Vyāsa, etc. (e), wept and lamented; Vyāsa comforted him by explaining the secret history of the slaughter (he had seen the Earth in Indra's hall, complaining before the gods and D.-ṛ. and Nārada, and Viṣṇu consoling her, saying that Duryodhana would cause her burden to be lightened by a battle in Kurukṣetra), etc. (f). Dhṛtarāṣṭra promised to live; Vyāsa disappeared (XI, 8). Requested by Janamejaya (g), Vaiṣampāyana related: After Duryodhana had been slain, and all the troops slaughtered, Sanjaya, deprived of his spiritual sight, came back to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and recommended him to cause the obsequial rites to be performed. Dhṛtarāṣṭra swooned away; Vidura comforted him ("Time drags all kinds of creatures away," etc.) (XI, 9). Dhṛtarāṣṭra resolved to visit the field of battle with the Kuru ladies in his company. The Kuru ladies (Gāndhārī, Kuntī, etc.) were placed in chariots under Vidura's supervision; the royal household, with a large number of the citizens, started from Hastinapura (XI, 10). Having proceeded a kroṣa, Dhṛtarāṣṭra met with Aṣvatthāman, etc. (h). Kṛpa related to Gāndhārī the fall of Duryodhana in unfair fight, and their nightly attack on the camp of the Pāṇḍavas (i); then Aṣvatthāman, etc., took leave of Dhṛtarāṣṭra in order to conceal themselves from the wrath of the Pāṇḍavas, and urged their steeds towards the banks of the Gangā, where they separated from one another: Kṛpa went to Hastinapura; Kṛtavarma to his own kingdom; Aṣvatthāman set out for the abode of Vyāsa; "before the sun rose; it was after this that the sons of Pāṇḍu encountered Aṣvatthāman and vanquished him" (XI, 11). Yudhisṭhira and his brothers set out in order to meet Dhṛtarāṣṭra, accompanied by Kṛṣṇa, etc. (k); they met the weeping ladies of the royal house on the way (l), and saluted Dhṛtarāṣṭra, who reluctantly embraced Yudhisṭhira, and broke an iron statue of Bhīma (that had been kept ready by Kṛṣṇa), mistaking it for Bhīma himself; he then grieved for having slain Bhīma, fell down, and was raised by his charioteer Sanjaya; Kṛṣṇa enlightened him, and told him not to cherish wrath (XI, 12). Certain maid-servants came and washed Dhṛtarāṣṭra; then Kṛṣṇa again addressed him, assuring him that the Pāṇḍavas were perfectly innocent (m); then Dhṛtarāṣṭra embraced Bhīma, etc. (n) (XI, 13). Commanded by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the Pāṇḍava brothers with Kṛṣṇa then proceeded to see Gāndhārī, who wished to curse Yudhisṭhira. The great R. Vyāsa, capable of proceeding everywhere with the fleetness of the wind, and capable of seeing the heart of every creature with his spiritual vision, understood her evil intentions, and having cleansed himself by the water of the Gangā, he suddenly appeared, and told her not to be angry with the Pāṇḍavas, but remember that she had every day for the eighteen days that battle lasted, when Duryodhana asked her to bless him, said: "Thither goes victory where righteousness is." Gāndhārī admitted that she and Dhṛtarāṣṭra should protect the Pāṇḍavas with as much care as Kuntī herself protected them, the fault being with Duryodhana, etc. (f); but Bhīma's unfair combat with Duryodhana in the presence of Kṛṣṇa moved her wrath (XI, 14). Bhīma addressed Gāndhārī, and extenuated his fault in having slain Duryodhana unfairly ("Duryodhana had formerly himself vanquished Yudhisṭhira unfairly," etc.) (o). Gāndhārī then blamed Bhīma for drinking Duṣṣāsana's blood, when Vṛshasena had deprived Nakula of his steeds; Bhīma denied that he had really drunk Duṣṣāsana's blood; "Kṛṣṇa knew this well; seeing Nakula deprived by Vṛshasena of his steeds, I caused the rejoicing brothers to be filled with dread; when the tresses of Draupadī were seized, I uttered certain words in rage; I dared not leave that vow unaccomplished lest I should be regarded as having swerved from the duties of a kṣatriya." Gāndhārī then inquired after Yudhisṭhira, who appeared before her and invoked her curses on himself for his sinful slaughter of all her sons; Gāndhārī's glance (under the cloth that covered her eyes) blasted a nail of Yudhisṭhira's toe. Arjuna moved away to the seat of Kṛṣṇa, and also the other Pāṇḍavas became restless. Gāndhārī then comforted the Pāṇḍavas and dismissed them. They then met with their mother Kuntī, who wept seeing their many scars. Draupadī wept for her children and Abhimanyu; Kuntī consoled her, and so did Gāndhārī (mentioning Vidura's predictions) (XI, 15).

Arjuna Kārtavīrya, § 394), while Gādhi, the king of Kānyakubja, was dwelling in the wood, there was born to him a beautiful daughter, Satyavati, whom Rēka Bhārgava asked in marriage. Gādhi said that, according to a family custom, the bridegroom must give a dowry of 1,000 brown steeds with a single sable ear each (so PCR. translates ekataḥ gṛāmakarṇmūḍam, cf. V, 3740, and Gālavacarita). Rēka obtained them from Varuṇa (the spot where the horses appeared was thence named Aśvatīrtha) and married Satyavati in Kānyakubja on the Gaṅgā, the very gods being companions of the bridegroom (janāḥ). Then his father Bhṛgu came to see him and his wife, and being pleased with Satyavati, granted her the boon that a son should be born to herself and to her mother, telling her that during their season they should embrace, her mother an aśvattha tree and herself an udumbara tree, and eat two pots of rice and milk (caru) which he had prepared, having ransacked the whole universe. Then Bhṛgu disappeared. They, however, made an interchange both of the pots and of the trees which they embraced. Knowing this by his divine knowledge, Bhṛgu came once more and told Satyavati that she had been deluded by her mother, and that therefore she would give birth to a brahman of kṣatriya character (kṣatracāritā) and her mother to a kṣatriya of brahman character (brāhmaṇacāritā). At her repeated entreaties, however, he granted her that not her son but her grandson should be of that description. The son of Satyavati was J., who excelled many ṛṣhis in Vedic lore (Vedādhyanena), and to whom the whole Dhanurveda appeared spontaneously (pratyabhūt), and likewise the four kinds of weapon (astrāni): III, 115, 10167.—§ 396: J. devoted himself to the study of the Veda and to penances. He married Renukā, the daughter of king Prasenajit, and lived with her in his hermitage practising austerities. She gave birth to five sons, of whom Rāma was the youngest. Once when Renukā had been filled with desire, seeing the Mārttikāvata king Citraratha bathing, together with his wife, J. ordered his sons Rumanvat (the eldest), Śrīheṣa, Vasu, and Viśvāvasu to kill their mother, but as they refused to do so he cursed them, so that they lost their senses and behaved like beasts and birds. Then he ordered Rāma to do it, and he immediately severed her head with an axe, and then prevailed upon J. to grant him that Renukā might be restored to life and not remember that she had been slain, that he himself might not be affected by this sin, that his brothers might recover their former state, and that he himself might be unrivalled on the field of battle and obtain a long life: III, 116, 10183, 10185, 10188.—§ 397: Once when the sons of J. had gone out, Arjuna Kārtavīrya, the lord of the country near the seashore (Anāpapatī), came to the hermitage, and, though he was praised by Renukā, he carried away the calf of the homadhenu and pulled down the trees. J. told this to Rāma, who then rushed towards Arjuna and cut down his 1,000 arms with his arrows and at last killed him. Then the sons of Arjuna came while Rāma was away, and with their arrows killed J., who did not fight, but repeatedly shouted the name of Rāma. When they had gone away, Rāma returned to the hermitage: III, 116, 10196, 10197.—§ 602 (Dronavadhap.): VII, 190v, 8727.—§ 606b (Paraṇu-Rāma): VIII, 34, 1583 (Bhārgavaṇḍam kule jātaḥ, father of Paraṇu-Rāma).—§ 638b (Rāmop.):

Assuming the form of Krodha (anger), Dharma entered the vessel of milk, desirous of putting J. to the test, and spoiled the milk. J. was not enraged. Krodha, in the form of a brahman lady, then said to him that the saying was false that the *Bhṛgu*s were wrathful, since he had been subdued by J., and asked his forgiveness. J. said that as the milk had been destined to the Pitṛs, Krodha ought to introduce himself to them. Through the curse of the Pitṛs, Krodha became a mongoose until he had spoken disrespectfully of Dharma. Then he wandered about to sacrifices and other sacred places, employed in censuring great sacrifices, until he came and censured the horse-sacrifice of Yudhisṭhira, who was Dharma's self; then he became freed from his curse: XIV, 92, 2887, (2894). On that spot there is found a species of gold, called jambūnada, used for celestial ornaments and like the complexion of indragopaka (cochineal) insects. Jambūkhandaḥavinirmāna ("the measurement of Jambūkhanda"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 337 (°m parva).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 520 (i.e. Jambūkhandaḥavinirmānaparvan).

[Jambūkhandaḥavinirmānaparvan (°va)] ("the section relating to the measurement of Jambūkhanda," the 67th of the minor parvas of Mbh.; cf. °vinirmāna). § 574: Janamejaya inquired how the Kurus and the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas fought on Kurukṣetra. Vaiçampāyana began the description of the battle. The Pāṇḍavas occupied the western part, turned towards the east, beyond Samantapañcaka. The force was collected from the whole of Jambūdṛpa. Yudhiṣṭhira and Duryodhana fixed watchwords. Seeing Duryodhana (description), the Pāṇḍavas were filled with joy, and blew their conches, etc.; Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa also blew their conches Devadatta and Pāṇḍajanya, at which the Kurus were alarmed. Various ill omens were beheld. Both parties settled rules and made covenants regarding the different kinds of combat (VI, 1). Vyāsa visited Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and offered to grant him spiritual vision that he might witness the battle. Dhṛtarāṣṭra did not like to see the slaughter of his kinsmen. Vyāsa then granted it to Saṅjaya, that he might narrate everything to Dhṛtarāṣṭra; weapons would not hurt him; he would come out of the battle with life. Vyāsa informed Dhṛtarāṣṭra of the omens (α), and appealed to him for peace; but Dhṛtarāṣṭra urged the disobedience of his sons. Vyāsa enumerated to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the omens that indicate victory, and recommended negotiation, as victory was uncertain (VI, 2, 3). Then Vyāsa departed. Seeing the many hundreds of millions of men that had come together at Kurujāṅgala to lay down their very lives for the sake of the earth, Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired of Saṅjaya after the attributes of Earth, and the details about the countries and cities from which they had come. Saṅjaya discoursed on the merits of the earth, and the various classes of creatures inhabiting it. Their twenty-four constituents are described as Gāyatrī (VI, 4). Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired about the rivers, mountains, and provinces of the earth, and their dimensions. Saṅjaya spoke of the five elements and their attributes, earth being the foremost. Then he began the description of the dvīpa of Sudarçana (VI, 5). Saṅjaya discoursed on the six mountains (varṣhaparvatāḥ, B.) that extend from the eastern to the western ocean, and are the resort of Si. and Cā.: Himavat, etc. (β), and the varṣas between them—Bhārata-varṣa, etc. (γ); Mālyavat, Gandhamādana; Meru (description); the four islands beside Meru—Bhadrāçva, etc. (δ); the bird Sumukha (δ); on Meru sport D, G., As., Rā., and Aps., and Brahmān, Rudra, and Çakra perform sacrifices; Tumburu, etc. (ε), adore the gods with hymns; the seven Rakṣas and Kaçyapa repair thither on every parvan-day (i.e. the day of full moon and that of new moon); upon the summit is Uçanas with the Dāityas; the jewels, etc., come from Meru, one-fourth part being enjoyed by Kubera, who gives only one-sixteenth to men. On the northern side of Meru is a forest of karnikāras; there Paçupati (the creator of all things), together with his celestial attendants and Umā, sports, bearing a chain of karnikāra flowers reaching down to his feet, and his three eyes resembling three suns; the Siddhas can behold him, but not persons of wicked conduct; from the summit of that mountain Gangā (o) falls down. On the western side of

Meru is Ketumāla (d), and also Jambūkhaṇḍa, Gandhāmādāna (e). The last varsha in the north and Bhārata's varsha in the south are both of the form of a bow. Amongst these seven varshas that which is further north excels the one to its immediate south in respect of longevity, stature, health, righteousness, pleasure, and profit. The huge mountains of Āmakūṭa are also called Kailāsa, where Vaiṣṇava (i.e. Kubera) lives in joy with Gh. To the north of Kailāsa and near the mountains of Mainaka there is the huge and beautiful mountain Hiranyacṛīga. Beside this the delightful lake Bindusaras (f), with golden sands. Rā. reside on Himavat, etc. (g). The two dvīpas Nāgadvīpa and Kāśyapadvīpa are the two ears of this hare-shaped region; the beautiful mountains of Malaya, having rocks like copper plates, form another part of Jambūdvīpa, making it resemble a hare (VI, 6). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sanjaya about the regions to the north and the east side of Meru, and about the mountains of Mālyavat. Sanjaya told about the Uttarakurus (Uttarāḥ Kuravah) (g). East of Meru the foremost region is Bhadrāśva (h). The jambū tree (i). Mālyavat (j) (VI, 7). Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired! about the names of all the varshas and mountains. Sanjaya related of Ramanaka, etc. (i). Dhṛtarāṣṭra became absorbed in meditation about his sons; then he said: "Time destroys and creates everything; Nara and Nārāyaṇa, omniscient, destroying all creatures (sarvabhūtaḥ), the gods cull him Vaiṣṇava, men call him Vishnu" (VI, 8). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked about Bhārata-varsha (k), about which Duryodhana and the Pāṇḍavas are so covetous. Sanjaya said that the Pāṇḍavas were not covetous about it, but Duryodhana, Çakuni, etc.; then he mentioned in Bhārata-varsha, the beloved land of Indra, etc. (aa), inhabited by Aryans and Mlecchas, the mountains—Mahendra, etc. (x); rivers ("all mothers of the universe and productive of great merit")—Gaṅgā, etc. (λ); countries—Kuru-Pāṇḍalāḥ, etc. (μ); and countries in the south—Dravīḍāḥ, etc. (ν); the tribes of the north—Mlecchāḥ, etc. (ξ); and in the east and the north—Çadrābhiraḥ, etc. (o) (VI, 9). Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired about life, strength, etc., in Bhārata-varsha, and of Haimavata-varsha and Harivarsha. Sanjaya related of the four yugas—Kṛta, etc. (π). The portion that remains of the Dvāpara age is small. Haimavata-varsha is superior to Bhārata-varsha, and Harivarsha superior to Haimavata-varsha, in every respect (VI, 10).

Māndhātṛ): VII, 62a, 2281 (van-quished by Māndhātṛ).—§ 641 (Rājadh.): XII, 124, 4564 (won the world in the course of three nights).—§ 677 (Mokṣadh.): XII, 235, 8598 (attained to heaven by giving his body for the sake of a brahman).—§ 723 (Ānuṣāsanik.): XIII, 6, 330 (Çakrasyodgamya çaraṇam prasthito J°ḥ | dvija-strīṇāṃ vadhaṃ kṛtvā kiṃ daivena na vārītāḥ).—§ 767 (do.): XIII, 137, 6253 (attained to heaven by giving a chariot and kine to a brahman; PCR. connects the first pāda Sāvitraḥ kuṇḍalaṃ divyaṃ with the rest, but Sāvitra is = Karna; cf. also XII, 8598). The passages quoted here might as well refer to one of the princes mentioned under the headings Janamejaya⁴⁻⁷.

Janamejaya², a prince, contemporary of the great war. § 130 (Amçāvat.): I, 67, 2698 (read with B. J°ah, among the kings who were incarnations from the Krodhavaça gana).—§ 554 (Sainyodyogap.): V, 4γ, 79 (among the princes to whom the Pāṇḍavas ought to send messengers).

Janamejaya³, son of Kuru. § 154 (Pūruv.): I, 94a, 3740 (the fifth son of Kuru and Vāhini).

Janamejaya⁴, son of the elder Parikṣhit. § 154 (Pūruv.): I, 94γ, 3742 (°adayaḥ sapta . . . Parikṣhito 'bhavan putrāḥ), 3744 (father of the elder Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc.).

Janamejaya⁵, son of Pūru. § 156 (Pūruv.): I, 95, †3764 (son of Pūru and Kausalyā), †3765 (husband of Anantā and father of Prācinvat).

Janamejaya⁶, a king of the Nīpas. § 562 (Bhagavadhyānap.): V, 74γ, 2729 (Nīpānām J°ḥ, among the vile kings who annihilated their kinsmen and relatives).

Janamejaya⁷, one or more Pāṇḍāla princes in the army of Yudhishtira. § 592 (Samçaptakavadhap.): VII, 23o, 998 (Pāṇḍālānām naravyūghraḥ, proceeded against Droṇa, description of his horses).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VII, 158χ, 7006; 167, 7483 (Pāṇḍālyasya).—§ 601 (Droṇavadhap.): VII, 184a, 8366.—§ 608 (Karna): VIII, 48f, 2253; 49χ, 2335 (Pāṇḍālyāḥ); 56ππ, 2756; 73, 3732; 82, †4181, (λ), †4195. Cf. Pāṇḍālyā.

Janamejaya, king of the mountaineers (Pārvatiya). § 604 (Karnap.): VIII, 6, 169 (in the army of Yudhishtira, had been slain by Duryodhana).

Janamejaya, Pārikshit. § 652b (Indrota-Pārikshit): XII, 150, 5595, 5596 (Pārikshit, B. has Pari°), 5600; 151, 5613, (5627), (5634); 152, 5638, 5642, 5673 (J. had slain a brahman, but was instructed by Indrota Çaunaka about the means of cleansing himself; Indrota then assisted J. in his horse-sacrifice. J. here belongs to the past (cf. also Harivamça, vv. 1608 ff.), but seems originally to be identical with Janamejaya¹ (Pārikshit)).

Janamejaya, pl. (°ah). § 267 (Yamasabhāva): II, 8, 334 (eighty J.'s in the palace of Yama).

Janana = Vishnu (1000 names).

Jānapadī, an Apsaras. § 198 (Çaradvat): I, 130, 5076 (sent by Indra to tempt Çaradvat).

Janārdana = Kṛṣṇa (Vishnu), q.v.

Janārdana, pl. (°ah). § 616 (Sauptikap.): X, 6, 233.

Jānārdani ("the son of Janārdana, i.e. Kṛṣṇa") = Pradyumna: III, 723.

Janasthāna, name of a place. § 425 (Hanūmad-Bhīmasarpv.): III, 147, 11199 (there Sītā was carried off by Rāvaṇa).—§ 528 (Rāvaṇagamana): III, 277, 15986 (°adaina, sc. Rāma Dāçarathi, there Sītā was robbed).—§ 595 (Shoḍaçarāj, v. Rāma Dāçarathi): VII, 59, 2226 (there Rāma slew Rākshasas), 2241 (do.).—§ 615k (Mahodara): IX, 39, 2256 (the head of a Rākshasa, which Rāma had cut off at J., fell upon the thigh of Mahodara).—§ 733l (Citrakūṭa): XIII, 25a, 1715 (a tirtha).

Janeçvara = Vishnu (1000 names).

Jāṅgala, pl. (°ah), a people. § 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 54, 2127 (Kuravas to sa-J°ah).—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 9μ, 346 (Mādroya-J°ah), 364. Cf. Kurujāṅgala, pl.

Jāṅgama = Çiva (1000 names²).

Jāṅghābandhu, a muni. § 264 (Sabhākriyāp.): II, 4a, 111 (among the brahmanas who waited upon Yudhishtira when he entered his palace).

Jāṅghāri, a son of Viçvāmitra. § 721b (Viçvāmitrop.): XIII, 4β, 256.

Janmamṛtyujarātiga = Vishnu (1000 names).

Jantu, son of king Somaka. § 408 (Jantūp.): III, 127, 10473, 10475, 10476, 10483, 10488, 10490; 128, 10492, 10498.

Jantūpākhyāna(m) ("episode relating to Jantu"). § 11: I, 2, 447.—§ 408 (Tirthay.): Questioned by Yudhishtira, Lomaça said: King Somaka had 100 wives, but was a long time sonless. At last, when he and his wives were old, he got a son Jantu, whom all the wives surrounded with the utmost care. One day when Jantu had been stung by an ant at his hip and cried, Somaka, afraid of losing him, inquired of his ṛṣi if there were a ceremony by which a man might get 100 sons. He was told to sacrifice Jantu and let his wives take a smell of the smoke of his fat; then 100 sons would be born to him, and Jantu himself would be born once more of the same mother, with a mark of gold on his back (III, 127). The sacrifice was performed notwithstanding the screams of the wives, and after ten months 100 sons were born, of whom Jantu was the eldest and most beloved and superior in merit, and had that mark of gold. When the guru and Somaka had died, the purohita was grilled in a terrible hell for having performed that sacrifice, and Somaka prevailed upon Dharmarāja (who said "one cannot enjoy or suffer for another person's acts") that he should be likewise tormented for the same period before he entered the blessed regions. Here they (the Pāṇḍavas, etc.) spent six nights (III, 128).

Jānujaṅgha, an ancient king. § 6 (Anukram.): I, 1a, 230 (in Nārada's enumeration).—§ 775 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 166γ, 7684.

Janya = Çiva (1000 names³).

[Jāpakopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode about the reciter of sacred mantras"). § 662a (Mokshadh.): A brahman, who was a reciter, conversant with the six Āṅgas, of the Kuçika race and son of Pippalāda, acquired spiritual insight into the Āṅgas; at the foot of Himavat he was devoted to the Vedas; silently reciting Gāyatri, he practised austerities for 1,000 years in order to attain to Brāhman. Then Gāyatri (Savitri) appeared and granted him the boon that his wish for recitation should go on increasing, and his absorption into meditation (samādhi) be more complete. She added that he should not have to go to hell, thither where great brahmanas go, but to the region of Brāhman, and that Dharma, etc. (a), would come to him in person. He continued engaged in recitation for 1,000 celestial years. Then Dharma came to him and told him to cast off his body in order to win regions of bliss; but he did not wish to reside in heaven except with his body, but only took pleasure in recitation. Time, Mṛtyu, and Yama came and told him the same. The brahman gave them arghya and pādyā. Ishvaku, who had set out on a tirtha-yātrā, came and was given arghya and pādyā. The brahman wished to give him something; Ishvaku, as a kehatiya, would not take anything except battle, but only himself give; at last, however, he asked to be allowed to enjoy the fruits of the brahman's recitations, but when the brahman consented he would not take them, and asked the brahman what those fruits were. The brahman did not know, as his recitations had never been connected with any special purpose; he told the king that Truth required that he should take them as he had asked for them (the signification of Truth). Dharma and Heaven (Svarga) seconded the brahman. Ishvaku wished to give his own merits instead, but in vain; then Ishvaku agreed to accept half the brahman's merit on the condition that the brahman should take half of his own, but he was refused. At this time two ungainly individuals came there, Virapa and Vikṛta (afterwards disclosed to be Desire and Wrath). Virapa said that he owed Vikṛta the merits of the gift of a cow, but that Vikṛta refused to take repayment (in the form of the merit of having given two kapila cows with calves to an uñchavṛtti); Vikṛta declared that Virapa owed him nothing; they asked Ishvaku to decide the question. Ishvaku hesitated; the brahman threatened to curse him. Ishvaku would give him some drops of water that had fallen upon his hand. Virapa approved of this arrangement, and said that Vikṛta really did not owe him anything; "we appealed to thee for thy own sake." Bhishma said that a reciter goes to Brāhman, or Agni, or Sārya, whose attributes he catches stupefied by attachment (rdgaṇa); and so also if he goes to Soma, etc. (β); if, however, he goes to those regions after having freed himself from attachment, he enters the Supreme and Imperishable, and becomes Brāhman (XII, 199). The brahman accepted, worshipped Dharma, etc. (γ), and set himself to his recitations again. Asked by Ishvaku, he agreed that he should go half and half with the king. Indra came there with D., Lp., Sā., Vi., etc. (δ), and said to the brahman and the king that they had attained to success ([sam]jiddha). Those two withdrew their senses from the objects of the world; fixing Prāṇa, etc. (ε), in the heart, they concentrated the mind in Prāṇa and Apāna united together, etc. (description). Brahmān welcomed the fiery flame that had issued from the head of the brahman, saying: "Reciters attain to the same end as the yogins; but as regards reciters, the honour is ordained for them that Brahmān himself shall advance to receive them"; then he once more imparted consciousness into that splendour; the brahman then entered the mouth of Brahmān, and so did the king. The deities rejoiced. Brahmān said that so also would he that reads "the great Smṛti" and "the Anuṣṛti" (i.e. resp. "the six Āṅgas and Manu, etc.," Nīl.) in this way attain to the same region with Brahmān; and so also he who is devoted to Yoga. Then Brahmān disappeared, and the deities, having honoured Dharma, returned to their respective abodes (XII, 200).

Jarā, a female Rākshasa. § 275 (Rājāsūyārambhap.): II, 17, 715 (rākshasi, united the two half-parts of Jarāsandha); 18, 729 (created by Svayambhū and named Gṛhadevī), 739 (āya sandhito yasmāj Jarāsandho bhavatu ayaṃ).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VII, 181, 8224 (in a battle between Jarāsandha and Balarāma, J. (who had united Jarāsandha) was slain together with her sons and relatives).—§ 621 (Rājadh.): XII, 5, 132 (fighting with Jarāsandha, Karna was about to sever the two parts of Jarāsandha's body which had been united by J.). Cf. Gṛhadevī, Rākshasi.

Jaras, the hunter who wounded Kṛṣṇa. § 793 (Mausalap.): XVI, 4, 126, 127, 128 (wounded Kṛṣṇa, piercing him at the heel; Kṛṣṇa comforted him and ascended to heaven).

Jarāsandha, king of the Māgadhas, son of Bṛhadratha. § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 129, 153 (Māgadhaṇḍaṃ varishṭhaṃ).—§ 130 (Amṣāvat.): I, 67, 2640 (incarnation of the Asura Vipracitti).—§ 232 (Svayamvarap.): I, 186, 7003 (present at the svayamvara of Draupadī).—§ 233 (do.): I, 187, 7030.—§ 273 (Rājāsūyārambhap.): II, 14, 571, 574, 576, 582, 588, 589, 593, 599, 602, 608, 610, 618, 626, 628, 631, 633 (J.'s great night, his allies; many peoples fled from fear of him; Kamsa married the daughters of J., Asṭi and Prāpti, who when he had been slain by Kṛṣṇa, urged J. to attack the Yādavas, who fled from Mathurā to Dvārakā; J. worshipped Śiva; the defeated kings he kept enclosed in Girivraja).—§ 274 (do.): II, 15, 641, 651 (Bārhadhrathah), 653, 655, 658, 659 (kept the kings in the temple of Śiva in order to sacrifice them, and must be defeated that Yudhisṭhira might perform his rājasūya); 16, 662, 673.—§ 275 (do.): II, 17, 686, 687 (J.'s birth; the two wives of Bṛhadratha bore each one-half of a child; the Rākshasi Jarā united the two halves); 18, 739 (because he had been united (sandhitah) by Jarā he was named J.); 19, 756, 757, 758, 760 (after the slaughter of Kamsa, J. hurled a mace toward Mathurā).—§ 276 (Jarāsandhavadhap.): II, 20, 768, 778, 791 (Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna, and Bhīma set out for Girivraja to slay J.); 21, 808, 815, 818, 819, 821, 824, 829, 835, 837, 839 (receives Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna, and Bhīma disguised as brahmins); 22, (854), 865, (880), 884, 888 (challenged to fight, J. installed his son Sahadeva as king); 23, 890, 892 (Māgadhaḥ), 893, 894, 897, 898, 923, 924 (engaged in a wrestling encounter with Bhīmasena); 24, 925, 927, 928, 929, 932 (Bhīmasena at last killed J.), 935 (description of his chariot), 950, 955, 969, 972 (kahīṇa).—§ 289 (Argḥāharaṇap.): II, 37, 1360 (had been slain by Kṛṣṇa (!)).—§ 290 (Çiṣpālavadhap.): II, 42, 1474, 1475, 1476, 1478 (all. to § 277); 44, 1529 (had been vanquished by Karna in a wrestling encounter and slain (? dehahhedañ ca lambhitah, cf. XII, 132)).—§ 307 (Anuśyūṭap.): II, 81, 2706 (had been slain by Bhīmasena).—§ 315 (Maitreyaśāpa): III, 10, 371 (do.).—§ 317b (Kṛṣṇa Vāsudeva): III, 12, 489 (had been slain by Kṛṣṇa (!)).—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 51, 2055 (Māgadhaṇḍo, had subdued the whole earth and had been slain by Bhīmasena).—§ 567 (Bhagavadgāyānap.): V, 130f, 4411 (had been slain by Kṛṣṇa (!)).—§ 588 (Bhīshmaavadhap.): VI, 122, 5834 (could not vanquish Karna).—§ 589 (Droṇābhishhekap.): VII, 11, 387 (Kaṃṣah . . . Jōma palitah), 393 (Ṇ . . . Janārdanaḥ . . . ghātayām asa).—§ 600 (Ghaṭotkacavadhap.): VII, 180, 18210 (had been slain by Kṛṣṇa (!)); 18188, 8213 (do.), 8217, 8220, 8224, 8225, 8227, 8228 (J. hurled a mace against Balarāma, who baffled it with his Sthūpākarna weapon; the mace fell down on earth and slew the Rākshasi Jarā (who had united J.), together with her sons and relatives. Deprived of his mace, J. was afterwards slain by Bhīmasena).—§ 621 (Rājadh.): XII, 4, 113 (present at the svayamvara of the daughter of the Kalinga king Citrāṅgada); 5, 129 (rājā Māgadhaḥ, challenged Karna, who in a wrestling encounter vanquished him (? bibheda sandhiṃ dehasya Jarayā śleshitasya hi, v. 132); J. then gave the town Mālini to Karna).—§ 717b (Nārāyaṇi): XII, 340, 12960 (Asuraḥ sphīto bhāmipalo Girivraja, incarnate as Kṛṣṇa Nārāyaṇa will slay him).—§ 768b (Kṛṣṇa Vāsudeva): XIII, 147, 6889 (Kṛṣṇa will vanquish J. and liberate the imprisoned kings).—§ 788 (Āçramavāsap.): XV, 25, 1868 (Māgadhadhipatya sūtā Jōa iti çrutasya, i.e. the wife of Sahadeva Pāṇḍava). Cf. Bārhadhratha, Māgadha, Māgadhadhipa, Māgadhadhipati, Māgadheçvara.

Jarāsandha, a son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. § 130 (Amṣāvat.): I, 67, 2735.—§ 182 (Dhṛtarāṣṭraputrānamak.): I, 117, 4548.

Jarāsandhasuta ("the son of Jarāsandha"). § 599 (Jayadrathavadhap.): VII, 125, 5058 (is slain by Droṇa, = Sahadeva?). Cf. Jarāsandhi.

Jarāsandhasutā ("the daughter of Jarāsandha"). § 787 (Āçramavāsap.): XV, 14, 24 (i.e. the wife of Sahadeva Pāṇḍava, cf. v. 668).

Jarāsandhātmaja ("the son of Jarāsandha") = Sahadeva: II, 962 (S°), 965. Cf. Jarāsandhi.

Jarāsandhavadha ("the killing of Jarāsandha"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 317 (parva, i.e. Jarāsandhavadhāparvan).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 408 (= do.).

[Jarāsandhavadhāparvan] ("the section relating to the killing of Jarāsandha," the 23rd of the minor parvas of Mbh.; cf. Jarāsandhavadha). § 276: As Kṛṣṇa thought that Jarāsandha was incapable of being vanquished in battle even by all the gods and Asuras, but might be vanquished in a personal struggle with bare arms (prāṇayuddha, PCR.), and as there was in himself policy, in Bhīma strength, and in Arjuna ability to protect them, he thought that Jarāsandha should be made to challenge Bhīma, and Kṛṣṇa therefore obtained the permission of Yudhisṭhira that Bhīma and Arjuna followed him. They set out in the garb of enātakas, with Bhīma in the van, from the land of the Kurus to the Paṇḍavas, over Kalakaja, Gaṇḍaki, Mahāçoṇa, Sadānitra (v. 794 runs thus in V.: Gaṇḍakiṇḍa Sadānitra Çarkara-varitam ova ca), the rivers on the Ekaparvata (? see BR.) and Purvā (i.e. Eastern) Koçala (B. has purvāç ca Koçalan), Mithilā, Mālā, Çarmaçvati, Gaṅga, Çoṇa, towards the east, dressed in garments of kuça-grass (instead of kuçjetracchada V. has Kuçamboraçchahalaṇ), to the Māgadha land. When they came to the mountain of Gorathā, they beheld the Māgadha town (II, 20).—§ 277: Girivraja is surrounded by the five large hills of Vaiṭhara, Varāha, Vṛkhaḥa, Rahigiri, and Caityaka. It was there that Gautama begat Kāketest, etc., upon the śūdra woman Auṇari, and was visited by the kings of Āṅga, Paṅga, etc. There dwell the Nāgas Arbuda, Čakravāpin, Svaṣṭika, and Maṇindga. Manu had ordered the Māgadhas never to be afflicted with drought; Kauçika and Maṇimat had favoured the country. The Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa entered the city by breaking down the peak of Caityaka, worshipped by the Bṛhadrathas and the citizens with perfumes and flower garlands, where Bṛhadratha had slain the cannibal Rahabha, and made of his hide (māntalabhiḥ, see BR.; Gaugapāṭha: māṃsalabhiḥ, Nil.) three drums [which the brothers broke, v. 814, not in V.]. As evil omens had been seen, the purohitas made Jarāsandha mount an elephant and carried fire about him (paryagnyakurvan), and he entered upon (dikṣitaḥ) a sacrifice with vows (niyamaṣṭhaḥ) and fasts (upavāsaparah). Kṛṣṇa, Bhīma, and Dhananījaya entered the city without weapons in the guise of śnātakas, snatched from the flower-vendors the garlands they had exposed for sale, and attired in robes of various colours and decked with garlands and ear-rings they entered the abode of Jarāsandha, who welcomed them, and hearing from Kṛṣṇa that Bhīma and Arjuna in consequence of a vow would not speak before night, quartered them in the sacrificial apartments (yajñāgāra) and retired to the palace (rājagṛham). At midnight he came to them, as he always observed the vow, that as soon as he should hear of the arrival of śnātakas, even at midnight, he would immediately come out and grant them an audience. As he questioned them about their strange attire, which was unsuitable for śnātakas, and their breaking down the Caityaka peak, and why they would not accept the worship he offered, Kṛṣṇa gave him some explanations (v. 848 ff.: śnātaka-vratina, rājan! brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya, viçāḥ | viçāhanīyamāç caikāṁ avīçāḥ ca saṁty uta | viçāhavaṇaḥ ca satatāṁ kṣatriyaḥ çriyam pçohati), and declared that they had come as his foes (II, 21). As Jarāsandha said that he did not remember to have injured them, Kṛṣṇa told him that they were sent by Yudhiṣṭhira to set at liberty the princes whom Jarāsandha intended to slaughter as a sacrifice to Çiva, because sacrificing human beings to the gods was never used (v. 864); he reminded him of the destruction of Dambhodhava, Kārtavīrya, Uttara, and Bṛhadratha, and challenged him to set free the monarchs or to fight. Jarāsandha chose to fight, and ordered Sahadeva to be installed on the throne. Then he thought of his generals Kauçika and Citrāsena, who had formerly been Hama and Pimbhaka. Kṛṣṇa, remembering that, according to the command of Brahmān, Jarāsandha was not to be slain by him or by the Mādhus, did not himself desire to slay him (II, 22). Jarāsandha having chosen to fight with Bhīma, the purohita brought pigment, garlands, etc., and propitiatory ceremonies (kṛtasvastīyanaḥ) were performed by a brahman; and likewise Bhīma, having consulted with Kṛṣṇa, had propitiatory ceremonies pronounced (kṛtasvastīyanaḥ). When Jarāsandha had taken off his crown and arranged his hair, they fought with their clenched fists as their only weapons. The combat began at the first day of the month Kārttika, and lasted, without intermission or food, till the thirteenth; on the fourteenth night Jarāsandha desisted from fatigue, and Kṛṣṇa obscurely intimated that he should now be killed (II, 23). At the instigation of Kṛṣṇa, Bhīma threw Jarāsandha into the air a hundred times, pressed his knee against his backbone and broke his body in two with a terrible roar, so that the citizens became dumb with terror and many women were prematurely delivered. Leaving the lifeless body at the palace gate, they went out of the town riding on Jarāsandha's celestial chariot, which Kṛṣṇa caused to be made ready, it being adorned with a celestial flagstaff and incapable of being vanquished by any king, upon which Indra and Viṣṇu had fought in the battle about Tāraka, riding upon which Indra had slain ninety-nine (navatir nava) Dānavas, which had been obtained by king Vasu from Vasava (i.e. Indra), from Vasu by Bṛhadratha, and from him by Jarāsandha. And Kṛṣṇa thought of Garuḍa, who sat upon the chariot along with the frightfully roaring creatures on its flagstaff. Kṛṣṇa then released his relatives and ordered them to assist Yudhiṣṭhira at his rājasūya. Stopping on a level plain outside the town, he was adored by the citizens, and he installed Sahadeva, the son of Jarāsandha, in the sovereignty of the Māgadhas. Then they arrived at Indraprastha. Thereupon Kṛṣṇa, having taken leave of Yudhiṣṭhira, etc., set out for his own city, riding upon that same celestial chariot that had been given to him by Yudhiṣṭhira, the Pāṇḍavas having circumambulated him (pradakṣiṇam akurvanta) (II, 24).

Jārāsandhi ("the son of Jarāsandha") = Sahadeva or Jayatsena. § 277 (Jarāsandhavadhap.): II, 22, 966 (i.e. Sahadeva, is anointed as king).—§ 280 (Bhīmasena): II, 30, 1092 (is vanquished by Bhīmasena on his digvijaya).—§ 555 (Sainyodyogap.): V, 107, 577 (Jayatsenaḥ, joined Yudhiṣṭhira).—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, 507, 2014 (°ḥ Sahadevo Jayatsenaḥ ca idv ubhau, do.).—§ 575, 2239 (Māgadhaḥ, do.).—§ 578 (Bhīmahmavadhap.): VI, 486, 1926 (in the army of Duryodhana).—§ 599 (Jayadruthavadhap.): VII, 125, 5061 (is slain by Droṇa).—§ 604 (Karṇap.): VIII, 55, 120 (Jayatsenaḥ, had been slain by Abhimanyu); 7, 1207 (in the army of Duryodhana).—§ 789 (Putradarçanap.): XV, 326, 877 (among the dead warriors who, summoned by Vyāsa, arose from the Gaṅgā). Jaratkāru, a ṛshi, husband of Jaratkāru and father of Āstika. § 26 (cf. Āstikap.): Sauti said: The ascetic J., when going about and practising religious austerities, one day saw his ancestors, the Yāyāvaras, hanging, heads down, in a great hole by a rope of virāṇa fibres, which was eaten into on all sides by a rat; he was told that it was because he had no offspring. He then promised to marry, if he might get a wife of the same name as his own, and who would be given to him in charity (I, 13). At last he married Jaratkāru, the sister of Vāsuki, the king of serpents (I, 14), who intended by this marriage to neutralize the curse inflicted on the serpents by their mother (Kadrū, q.v.). Having begotten Āstika, J. ascended to heaven together with his ancestors (I, 15): I, 13, 1029 (Yāyāvarāṇaṁ pravaraḥ), 1034, 1037, (1041), 1041, 1045; 14, 1054, 1055, 1056; 15, 1067, 1068.—§ 49 (Vāsuki): I, 38, 1633, 1634, 1635 (it had been destined by Brahmān that J. should marry Vāsuki's sister Jaratkāru and begot Āstika on her); 39, 1650, 1653, 1654.—§ 50 (cf. Āstikap.): Etymology of the name J. (*jareti kṛṣayam āhur vai, dāruṇaṁ kārṣaṇyāṇitaṁ | çariraṁ kārṣaṇyāṇitaṁ tat sa dhīmāñ ohanaiḥ çanaiḥ | kṛṣayām dea tīroṇa tapas . . . his wife when the sun was setting, was awakened by her, lest the twilight should pass away without his prayers being said. J. felt insulted, as he believed that the sun had no power to set in the usual time if he was asleep. He therefore left her and again began to practise austerities: I, 47, 1882, 1891, 1897, 1901, 1911.—§ 60 (Sarpasattra): I, 53, 2064; 54, 2079.—§ 68 (Āstika): I, 58, 2189 (yo J'una jātaḥ Jaratkārau, i.e. Āstika).—§ 565 (Gālavacarita): V, 117, 3975 (*remo . . . yathā . . . [Jatāsuraavadhaparvan] ("the section treating of the killing of Jatāsura," being the 37th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Jatāsuraavadha.) § 435: One day, after the Rākṣasas with Ghaṭotkaca had departed, while Bhīma was a-hunting, and Lomaṣa and the other ṛbis had gone away to bathe and collect flowers, the Rākṣasa Jatāsura, who had followed Yudhiṣṭhira in the guise of a brahman versed in all the çāstras, with the object of possessing himself of the arms of the Pāṇḍavas and of Draupadī, began to flee away with the arms and Draupadī and the three Pāṇḍavas. Sahadeva extricated himself, and snatching the sword Kauṣika, he began to call Bhīmasena. Yudhiṣṭhira reproached him, saying that the Rākṣasas are the root of virtue and know virtue (dharmaṃ) best, and that the Rākṣasas, gods, Pitṛs, Siddhas, Rakhs, Gandharvas, etc., depend for their lives on men, etc. Yudhiṣṭhira then made himself ponderous. Sahadeva was about to attack the Rākṣasa, when Bhīma appeared mace in hand. The Rākṣasa set them down, and he and Bhīma began to fight with trees, like Vālin and Sugriva, and then with rocks, and at last by wrestling, till Bhīma, having dealt a blow on the neck of the Rākṣasa, lifted him up, and dashed him on the ground and severed his head from his body, and then presented himself before Yudhiṣṭhira (III, 157).

[Jatugrhaparvan] ("the section relating to the lac-house," the 8th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Jatugrhaparva.) § 213: Vaiçampāyana briefly related the plan of Saubala, Duryodhana, Duṣṣāṇa, Karna, and Dhṛtarāṣṭra to burn the Pāṇḍavas and Kunti in a lac-house, and their escape. Asked by Janamejaya, he then began to relate it more fully. The Pāṇḍavas frustrated all the plans of murdering them laid by Duryodhana, etc., without speaking of them, in obedience to the counsels of Vidura. People began to speak in all public places of installing Yudhiṣṭhira on the throne instead of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Duryodhana represented to Dhṛtarāṣṭra that this would for ever exclude himself and his brothers from the throne (I, 141). Duryodhana, Karna, Çakuni, and Duḥçāsana held a consultation together, and Duryodhana prevailed upon Dhṛtarāṣṭra to exile the Pāṇḍavas to Vārāṇavata ("Açvatthāman is on my side; with him follow Drona and Kṛpa; Vidura is dependent on us for his means of life, though he is covertly with the foe") (I, 142). Duryodhana and his brothers began gradually to win over the people to their side by grants of wealth and honours, while Dhṛtarāṣṭra suggested to the Pāṇḍavas to visit the festival of Paçupati at Vārāṇavata. Fully understanding the motives of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Yudhishtira let Bhishma, Vidura, Droṇa, Bāhlika, Somadatta, Kṛpa, Açvatthāman, Bhāriçraava, Gāndhārī, etc., give them their benedictions, and the Pāṇḍavas having performed propitiatory rites in order to obtain the kingdom, set out for Vārāṇavata (I, 143). Duryodhana prevailed upon Puroçana to reach Vārāṇavata that very day upon a swift chariot, and to construct a house of inflammable materials and burn the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī (I, 144). The people, who were distressed by the departure of the Pāṇḍavas, and angry with Dhṛtarāṣṭra, were calmed by Yudhishtira. Vidura, in obscure words (cf. Mlecchavācā, v. 5803), warned Yudhishtira, who explained the meaning to Kuntī. They set out on the 8th day of the month of Phalguna when Rohiṇī was ascendant (I, 145). They were received with great honours by the citizens of Vārāṇavata and installed by Puroçana first in a palace that had been built for them, and after ten days in the lac-house called Çiva (Çivakhyam). Yudhishtira scented the smell of fat, etc., and told it to Bhīma, but resolved to seem unsuspecting (I, 146). A miner, sent by Vidura, told Yudhishtira that Puroçana would put fire to the house on the fourteenth night of the dark lunation, and made a large subterranean passage (I, 147). They lived there for a year. Then on a certain night Kuntī fed a large number of brahmins; and there came also a Nishāda woman with her five sons, who became intoxicated and lay down in the house to sleep. The Pāṇḍavas then set fire to the house and burnt Puroçana and the Nishādas, while they themselves escaped through the subterranean passage and fled in haste, Bhīma carrying his mother and brothers (cf. III, v. 546 foll.). The citizens thought they had been burnt to death (I, 148). A person sent by Vidura took the Pāṇḍavas and Kuntī to the other side of the Gaṅgā in a boat (I, 149). The miner had covered the hole he had dug with ashes, and the townspeople thought that the Nishāda woman with her five sons were Kuntī and the Pāṇḍavas, and sent to Dhṛtarāṣṭra to inform him that they had been burnt to death together with Puroçana. Dhṛtarāṣṭra wept in deep sorrow, and caused the funeral rites to be performed. Meanwhile the Pāṇḍavas having crossed the Gaṅgā proceeded in the darkness to the south and reached a dense forest. Yudhishtira then prevailed upon Bhīma to carry Kuntī and his brothers (I, 150). The motion of Bhīma's legs raised a wind like that of the months of Çveti and Çukra, while he trod down the trees and swam across streams. Towards evening they sat down in a terrible forest under a banyan-tree. Kuntī was thirsty, and Bhīma proceeded to a pool at a distance of a gavyatī, and brought water by soaking his upper garments. When he found them sleeping from fatigue, he lamented that Yudhishtira would not yet allow him to slay Duryodhana, etc., and sat there awake keeping watch over them (I, 151).

Jayadratha¹, an ancient king. § 267 (Yamasabhāv) : II, 8, 337 (in the palace of Yama).

Jayadrathavadha(h) ("the slaughter of Jayadratha"). § 10 (Parvas) : I, 2, 339 (°śaḥ parva, i.e. Jayadrathavadhaparvan).

[Jayadrathavadhaparvan] ("the section including the slaughter of Jayadratha," the 75th of the minor parvas of Mbhr. ; cf. Jayadrathavadha). § 598 : Dhṛtarāshṭra lamented the slaughter of his troops ; "formerly in the abode of Somadatta, who was devoted to truth, I used to hear delightful sounds" (instead of grief and lamentations, as now in the houses of Vivimçati, etc. (a)) ; then he mentioned Kṛṣṇa's ambassadorship, the match at dice, that he and Vidura, etc. (β) did not approve of ; "possessed of sovereignty, the Pāṇḍavas will ever listen to the voice of Çalya, etc." (γ) ; "none can fight Bhīmasena, etc. (δ) ; only Duryodhana, etc. (ε), would venture to resist them" ; he asked what the principal leaders (ζ) did (VII, 85). Saṅjaya rebuked Dhṛtarāshṭra for his folly in bringing about the battle (VII, 86). Droṇa arrayed his divisions. The warriors shouted in anger "where is Arjuna?" etc. (η). Droṇa assured Jayadratha of protection by Somadatta's son, etc. (θ). Droṇa's array was in part a çakaṭa and in part a circle, 48 miles long, and the width of its rear was 20 miles ; in the rear was another impenetrable array in the form of a lotus ; and within that a needle, in the mouth of the needle was Kṛtavarman ; next came the Kāmbhoja king, etc. (i) ; behind them all was Jayadratha at one side of the needle. At the head of the çakaṭa was Droṇa (b). Si. and Cū. wondered. Duryodhana rejoiced (VII, 87). After the Rudra-hour (Raudra muhūrta) had set in Arjuna made his appearance, while portents appeared in nature. Then Nakula's son Çatānika and Dhṛṣṭadyumna arrayed the divisions of the Pāṇḍavas. Durmarshana (Dhṛtarāshṭra) took up his position in the van in order to oppose Arjuna ; Arjuna was at the very van of his army. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna blew their conches. The Kuru army was afraid (VII, 88).—§ 599 : THE FOURTEENTH DAY'S BATTLE. Arjuna & Durmarshana ; a terrible carnage was caused by Arjuna ; Durmarshana's division fled away (VII, 89). Duḥçāsana & Arjuna ; Duḥçāsana's division was slaughtered and routed ; he sought protection with Droṇa (VII, 90). Arjuna met with Droṇa and prayed for leave to slay Jayadratha ; Droṇa refused leave and attacked Arjuna ; unable to vanquish Droṇa, Arjuna avoided him from fear of losing time, and penetrated into the Kuru army, the Pāṇḍala princes, Yudhāmanyu and Uttamanujas, being the protectors of his wheels ; Jaya, etc. (a), opposed Arjuna, and so did the Abhishāhas, etc. (β), with Droṇa at their head (VII, 91). Droṇa & Arjuna, who employed the Brāhma weapon. Arjuna avoided Droṇa, began to slaughter the Bhojas, and took up his position between Kṛtavarman and the Kāmbhoja king Sudakeṣiṇa. Arjuna & Kṛtavarman, who was stupefied ; Arjuna proceeded to the division of the Kāmbhojas. Kṛtavarman & Yudhāmanyu + Uttamanujas, who were prevented by

Kṛtavarman from following Arjuna, who did not slay Kṛtavarman. Çrutāyudha (b) & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa) ; Çrutāyudha attacked Kṛṣṇa with his mace, which returned and slew Çrutāyudha himself ; all the troops fled away. The Kāmbhoja king Sudakeṣiṇa & Arjuna, who slew him ; all the troops fled away (VII, 92). Arjuna slew the Abhishāhas, etc. (γ). Çrutāyus + Acyutāyus & Arjuna, who slew them both with the Aindra weapon. Niyatāyus + Dirghāyus (the sons of Çrutāyus and Acyutāyus) & Arjuna, who slew them both. The Āngas (on elephants) + the Kalinga king, etc. (on elephants ; urged by Duryodhana), & Arjuna, who caused a great carnage among them, as also among the Mlecchas, Yavanas, etc. (δ). The Ambastha king Çrutāyus & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa), who slew him (VII, 93). Duryodhana addressed Droṇa in wrath and affection. Droṇa acknowledged his inability to oppose Arjuna on account of his own old age. Droṇa cased Duryodhana in invulnerable armour (invoking the Vedaas, Nakusha, etc. (ε)) and urged him to oppose Arjuna ; with this armour he need have no fear from As., D., Y., U., Rā., men, etc. It was the armour that Çiva had given to Indra, by means of which he slew Vṛtra (ε) ; Indra > Āngiras > Byhaspati > Agniveçya > Droṇa. It was put on, its pieces being joined with Brāhma strings. Brahmān had himself put it on Vishṇu in days of yore, and on Indra in the fight about Tāraka. Duryodhana + Trigartas, etc., proceeded towards the chariot of Arjuna (VII, 94). The Pāṇḍavas (headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna) + Somakas & Droṇa ; a fierce battle ensued in front of the Kuru array ; Droṇa & Dhṛṣṭadyumna ; Droṇa's host became divided into three bodies : one which retreated towards Kṛtavarman, another towards Jalasandha, another towards Droṇa himself ; Vivimçati, etc. (ζ), & Bhīmasena ; king Bāhlika & the Draupadeyas ; the Govāsana chief Çaibya & the Kāçi king ; the Madra king Çalya & Yudhisṭhira ; Duḥçāsana & Sātyaki ; Saṅjaya & Cekitāna ; Çakuni (+ 700 Gāndhāras) & Sahadeva ; Vinda and Anuvinda & Virāṭa ; king Bāhlika & Çikhaṇḍin ; the Avanti chief + the Sauviras and Prabhadrakas & Dhṛṣṭadyumna ; Alāyudha & Ghaṭotkaca ; Kuntibhoja and Rā. Alambusha. Jayadratha remained in the rear, protected by Kṛpa, etc., and the protectors of his wheels were Açvatthāman on the right and Karna on the left ; his rear was protected by Kṛpa, etc. (η), headed by Somadatta's son (VII, 95). Droṇa, in front of his array, fought the Pūthas. Vinda and Anuvinda & Virāṭa ; Çikhaṇḍin & Bāhlika ; the Govāsana king Çaibya & the Kāçi king ; the Bāhlika king & the Draupadeyas ; Duḥçāsana & Sātyaki ; Kuntibhoja & Alambusha ; Nakula and Sahadeva & Çakuni, who fled towards Droṇa ; Rā. Ghaṭotkaca & Rā. Alāyudha ; Yudhisṭhira & Çalya ; Vivimçati, etc. (θ), & Bhīmasena (VII, 96). Bhīmasena & Jalasandha ; Yudhisṭhira & Kṛtavarman ; Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Droṇa ; Dhṛṣṭadyumna mounted Droṇa's chariot, had his pārshni charioteers slain, etc., but was rescued by Sātyaki ; Droṇa & Sātyaki (VII, 97). Sātyaki (Yuyudhāna) & Droṇa ; D. (headed by Brahmān and Soma), Si., Cū., Vd., M.-U. looked at ; Droṇa acknowledged in Sātyaki the force of Rāma, etc. (i) ; D. (with Indra), G., Si., and Cū. admired him ; Droṇa invoked the Āgneya weapon, Sātyaki the Vāruṇa weapon. Just at that time the sun went down in his course. Yudhisṭhira, etc. (κ) (in order to protect Sātyaki), & Droṇa (protected by Duḥçāsana, etc.) (VII, 98). Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa steadily proceeded towards Jayadratha (description). Vinda and Anuvinda & Arjuna, who slew them both. While Kṛṣṇa groomed Arjuna's steeds, Arjuna on foot held the whole Kuru army in check, and piercing the earth with a weapon made a lake for his steeds to drink from, and an arrow hall for them to rest within; Nārada came to see the lake (VII, 99). The Si. and Cā., etc., applauded. The Kurus fiercely attacked Arjuna while he was on foot; Arjuna beat back all his assailants; the Kurus applauded his prowess, blaming Duryodhana. After finishing the grooming Kṛṣṇa reharnessed the steeds and proceeded with great speed. Duryodhana followed (VII, 100). The progress of Arjuna (with Kṛṣṇa) became irresistible. Duryodhana outran Arjuna in a single chariot, and then turned back, facing Kṛṣṇa (VII, 101). Kṛṣṇa pointed out Duryodhana to Arjuna and urged him to slay him ("the three worlds with D., A., and men cannot vanquish thee, what need be said of Duryodhana?"), mentioning Duryodhana's injuries (λ); Arjuna promised to slay him; Arjuna & Duryodhana (VII, 102). Arjuna failed to pierce Duryodhana in consequence of the latter's invulnerable armour; "the chief of the gods gave this invulnerable armour to Angiras > Brhaspati > Indra > Arjuna." Arjuna shot strong arrows, strengthened by mantras, at Duryodhana, which were cut off by Aśvatthāman; this weapon could not be used again lest it should slay Arjuna himself. Arjuna deprived Duryodhana of his chariot, and steeds, and weapons; when Kṛṣṇa blew Pāṇḍajanya and Arjuna drew Gāṇḍīra, the Kurus fell down on the ground. The protectors of Jayadratha attacked Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna (VII, 103). Bhūriçravas, etc. (μ) (with Saindhava horses, etc.), & Arjuna, who blew Deradatta, as Kṛṣṇa blew Pāṇḍajanya; Duryodhana & Bhūriçravas, etc. (μ), & Arjuna; Aśvatthāman & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa) (VII, 104). Sañjaya described to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the standards (ν). Arjuna, assailed by many chariot-warriors, slew many of them (VII, 105). In the afternoon: The Pāṇḍavas and the Pāṇḍavas (desirous of slaying Droṇa) & the Kurus; Bṛhatkshattra (among the Kaikayas) & Droṇa; Kshemadhṛti & Bṛhatkshattra; Dhṛṣṭaketu (the Cedi) & Kshemadhṛti; Viradhanvan & Dhṛṣṭaketu; Yudhishtira & Droṇa; Vikarna (Dhārtarāṣṭra) & Nakula; Durmukha & Sahadeva; Vyāghradatta & Sātyaki; Bhūriçravas & the Draupadeyas; Rā. Alambusha (Rahyaçrṅga's son) & Bhīmasena; Yudhishtira & Droṇa; Yudhishtira displayed great heroism; both he and Droṇa invoked the Brahma weapon; Yudhishtira, in distress, getting upon the chariot of Sahadeva is borne away from the field (VII, 106). Kshemadhṛti & the Kaikaya prince Bṛhatkshattra, who slew Kshemadhṛti; Viradhanvan & Dhṛṣṭaketu (advancing against Droṇa); Si. and Cā. wondered; Viradhanvan was slain by Dhṛṣṭaketu; Durmukha (Dhārtarāṣṭra) & Sahadeva; Durmukha mounted the chariot of Niramitra, who was slain by Sahadeva; Nakula & Vikarna (Dhārtarāṣṭra), whom he vanquished; Vyāghradatta (Magadha prince) & Sātyaki, who slew him; the Magadhas & Sātyaki, who nearly exterminated them; the Kurus were routed; Droṇa & Sātyaki (VII, 107); Bhūriçravas & the Draupadeyas; Çatānka (the son of Nakula), etc. (ξ), & Bhūriçravas, who was slain by the son of Sahadeva; Rā. Alambusha (son of Rahyaçrṅga; recollecting the slaughter of his brother Baka) & Bhīmasena; Alambusha resorted to illusive tricks and caused a river of blood with Rā., etc., wafting away countless Cedis, etc. (ο); Bhīma employed the Tvāṣṭra weapon; Alambusha fled to Droṇa (VII, 108). Ghaṭotkaca & Alambusha; both availed themselves of their illusive power; the Pāṇḍavas (Bhīmasena, etc.) & Alambusha; Bhīmasena's son, etc. (π), & do., who was slain by Ghaṭotkaca (VII, 109). Yuyudhāna & Droṇa; Yudhishtira urged Dhṛṣṭadyumna and all his troops, headed by Bhīmasena, to rescue Yuyudhāna; Yudhishtira (with all his troops) & Droṇa, who slew many and vanquished the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ρ); Yudhishtira heard the sound of Pāṇḍajanya and thought Arjuna to be in distress; he requested Sātyaki to go to Arjuna and bring him news of his safety; Arjuna had said in the Devatavana to Yudhishtira, "even if Kṛṣṇa, etc. (σ), assist us, I shall yet appoint Sātyaki for our aid, since there is none equal to him," and Yudhishtira had witnessed his reverence for Arjuna at Devāraka when returning from the tirthas, and at Upaplavya his affection for the Pāṇḍavas. "the day is about to end"; amongst the Vṛkṣis two were regarded as atirathas: Pradyumna and Sātyaki (in weapons equal to Nārāyaṇa, in strength to Saṅkarṣaṇa, in bravery to Arjuna, surpassing Bhishma and Droṇa) (VII, 110). Sātyaki hesitated to comply with Yudhishtira's request on the ground of the counter-commands of Arjuna ("only Pradyumna and Sātyaki are a match for Droṇa in battle"); "the Saurirakas, etc. (τ), D., A., men, Rā., K., M.-U., etc., are no match for Arjuna in battle." Yudhishtira pressed his request, saying that Bhīma, etc. (υ), will protect him during Sātyaki's absence (VII, 111). Sātyaki agreed to obey Yudhishtira; "the distance from here is three yojanas"; he would crush the elephants of the Añjana breed, mounted by Mlecchas (named Rukmurathas), commanded by Karna and devoted to Duḥśāsana, at Karna's command returning from the pursuit of Arjuna and waiting for Sātyaki, and also ordered by Duryodhana; he would also crush those 700 elephants ridden by Kirātas (sprung from the race of Agni) (ϕ) and formerly given by the Kirāta king to Arjuna; obtaining these and Kṛpa, etc. (φ), Duryodhana thought lightly of the Pāṇḍavas; "also the Kūmbhojas (a full akṣauhini) are on the alert with their eyes on me." Then Sātyaki directed his chariot to be properly equipped; "I shall also have to encounter the Çakas." Yudhishtira caused quivers, etc., to be placed on Sātyaki's chariot (with steeds of the Sindhu breed); then Sātyaki set out (description) with his charioteer and friend, the younger brother of Dāraka. Bhīmasena also set out with Sātyaki, but was prevailed upon by Sātyaki to return and protect Yudhishtira (VII, 112). Yudhishtira followed Sātyaki in order to reach the chariot of Droṇa. Dhṛṣṭadyumna and king Vasudāna urged the warriors to protect Sātyaki. Sātyaki made the Kurus flee away. Droṇa & Sātyaki, who then, like Arjuna, avoided Droṇa, pointing out to his charioteer the Avantis, etc. (χ), and then smiting the great host of Karna. Kṛtavarma & Sātyaki, who slew Kṛtavarma's charioteer and issued out of the Bhoja division, while Kṛtavarma (himself urging his steeds) attacked Bhīmasena. Yuyudhāna & the Kūmbhojas. Droṇa (making the Bhoja king protect his troops) pursued Yuyudhāna, while the Pāṇḍava host began to resist him. The Pāṇḍavas (headed by Bhīmasena) & Kṛtavarma (VII, 113). Dhṛtarāṣṭra wondered before Sañjaya that even such an army as his should be slain ("it must be Destiny"), and asked about what passed. Sañjaya, quoting Vidura, rebuked Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and then related: the Pārthas (ψ) (headed by Bhīmasena) & the Bhoja king Kṛtavarma; Çikhaṇḍin was brought away from the battle by his charioteer; Kṛtavarma vanquished all the Pārthas, etc. (ω) (VII, 114). Sātyaki turned back to check Kṛtavarma, whom he deprived of his chariot; then he broke the hostile division and proceeded on his way. Sātyaki & Rukmaratha (with the Trigartas and elephants, to the left of Droṇa's host; urged by Duryodhana they waited for Sātyaki); this elephant division fled away. The Magadha king Jalasandha (on an elephant) & Yuyudhāna (with white steeds), who slew him; the Kurus fled away. Droṇa & Yuyudhāna (VII, 115). Droṇa, etc. (aa) & Yuyudhāna; Duryodhana fled away, mounting the chariot of Citrāsena. Kṛtavarman & Yuyudhāna, who made him fall on his knees (VII, 116). Droṇa & Sātyaki, whose driver swooned away; Sātyaki, acting as his own driver, continued to fight with Droṇa, who was carried away by his steeds; the troops broke. Droṇa returned to the front of the array in order to check the Pāṇḍavas (VII, 117). King Sudarśana & Sātyaki, who slew him (VII, 118). Sātyaki's driver pronounced an eulogy (ββ) upon him. Sātyaki urged him to take him to the Kāmbojas; Yuyudhāna & the Yavanas, who fled away; thousands of Kāmbojas, etc. (γγ), were similarly slain by Sātyaki; Cū. and G. applauded him (VII, 119). Yuyudhāna proceeded towards Arjuna; Duryodhana, etc. (δδ), followed him behind and attacked him as he proceeded slowly; an awful carnage set in; Duryodhana's chariot was taken away by the steeds; the others then fled away. Yuyudhāna proceeded towards the chariot of Arjuna (VII, 120). Dhṛtarāṣṭra wondered before Sanjaya at the feats of Yuyudhāna ("I think Destiny is now unpropitious"). Sanjaya blamed Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Duryodhana, and then continued his narrative. At the command of Duryodhana the Samcāptakas rallying, with a number of Çakas, etc. (cc) (headed by Duryodhana), attacked Sātyaki; Duhçāsana (with a large force of robbers) & Sātyaki; many elephants of the race of Añjana, etc. (KK), were slain, and many steeds of the Vanāyu race, etc. (ηη), and many thousands of warriors; many Daradas & Sātyaki; they fled away. Droṇa, hearing the noise, told his charioteer to take the chariot to the spot where Yuyudhāna was; the charioteer remarked that the Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍavas were rushing against Droṇa; suddenly Sātyaki appeared, and the broken troops and Duhçāsana, all struck with panic, rushed towards Droṇa's division (VII, 121). Droṇa rebuked Duhçāsana for his cowardice (quoting his words to Draupadi), and told him to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas (θθ). Duhçāsana (with Mlecchas) & Sātyaki. Droṇa & the Pāṇḍavas + the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ι); Droṇa slew the Pāṇḍava prince Vṛaketu, and his brothers Citraketu, Sudhanvan, Citravarman, and Citraratha; Dhṛṣṭadyumna mounted Droṇa's chariot, but was then carried away by his own steeds; having caused a great carnage Droṇa once more took up his station in the midst of his own array (VII, 122). Duhçāsana & Sātyaki; the warriors of Duhçāsana (but not himself) fled away. Duryodhana urged a body of 3,000 Trigartas towards Yuyudhāna, who slew 500; then they turned towards Droṇa. While Sātyaki was proceeding towards Arjuna he was again attacked by Duhçāsana, who was taken up by the Trigarta leader on his chariot; Sātyaki did not slay him, recollecting the words of Bhīmasena, but quickly proceeded along the track of Arjuna (VII, 123). D. and Cū. wondered. Bhīmasena, etc. (κκ), & the Kauravas. Sātyaki proceeded towards Arjuna. Duryodhana & the Pāṇḍavas (λλ); Duryodhana caused a great carnage. Droṇa (in order to rescue Duryodhana) & the Pāṇḍavas; a dreadful carnage took place. Then there arose a loud uproar from the place where Arjuna was (VII, 124). In the afternoon: Droṇa & the Somakas (and Pāṇḍavas); Brhatkshatra (of the Kekayas) & Droṇa; both invoked the Brāhma weapon; Brhatkshatra was slain by Droṇa, who then slew the Cedi Dhṛṣṭaketu (the son of Çiçupāla; with steeds of the Kāmboja breed), and then Dhṛṣṭaketu's son, and the son of Jarāsandha. The Cedis, etc. (μμ), & Droṇa, who slew them, especially the foremost among the Cedis. The Pāṇḍavas began to tremble and loudly called for Bhīmasena and Dhṛṣṭadyumna. Droṇa slew Kahatradharman (Dhṛṣṭadyumna's son), and caused Cakṛtāna to be carried away by his steeds. Drupada (censuring Duryodhana) (placing the Pārthas at his head) & Droṇa (then 85 years of age, with white locks, but behaving like a youth of 16) (VII, 125). Yudhisṭhira was anxious at not having obtained any intelligence of Arjuna and Sātyaki, and thought of sending Bhīma after Sātyaki, asking him to send him a message by uttering a leonine roar (VII, 126). Bhīma requested Dhṛṣṭadyumna to protect Yudhisṭhira, and prepared to set out (description) after Sātyaki and Arjuna; the fierce blasts of Pāṇḍavajanya were heard, filling Yudhisṭhira with fear. Bhīma (with his charioteer Viçoka) broke through the head of the Kuru array; the Pāṇḍavas and Somakas followed him behind; the brothers Duhçāla, etc. (νν), (with celestial weapons) he passed, and rushed against Droṇa's division; Droṇa & Bhīmasena; Bhīma's mace pressed Droṇa's chariot down into the earth; Droṇa, who had previously alighted, was saved; Bhīma slew eleven sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra: Kuṇḍabhadra, etc. (ξξ); Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons and the soldiers fled away. Bhīmasena then passed towards the division of Droṇa (VII, 127). Bhīma & Droṇa; Bhīma passing through the Bhoja, etc. (οο), division and beholding Sātyaki, proceeded with great speed and sighted Arjuna, to whom he made his presence known by a roar; Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa uttered loud roars in return; Yudhisṭhira understood that all was safe, and thought of Arjuna's feats (ππ) (VII, 128). Karna & Bhīmasena; Karna mounted the chariot of Vṛhasena; Bhīma uttered a loud roar that gratified Yudhisṭhira. Arjuna stretched Gāṇḍīva and Kṛṣṇa blew Pāṇḍavajanya (VII, 129). Duryodhana saw Droṇa, and affectionately chided him for his having allowed Sātyaki and Bhīma to penetrate the Kuru host and approach to the aid of Arjuna. Droṇa counselled Duryodhana to make effective arrangements for the protection of Jayadratha. While going back towards Jayadratha, Duryodhana encountered the two brothers, the Pāṇḍava princes, Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas, the protectors of the wheels of Arjuna's chariot, who had formerly, while Arjuna penetrated the Kuru host, been checked in their progress by Kṛtavarman, and were now proceeding towards Arjuna by the flank of the Kuru army. Uttamaujas ascended the chariot of Yudhāmanyu, which Duryodhana pressed down into the earth with his mace, and then Duryodhana ascended the chariot of the Madra king; Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas, ascending two other chariots, proceeded towards Arjuna (VII, 130). Karna proceeded against Bhīma. Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired about the battle (pp). Sanjaya related: Bhīma desired to avoid Karna and to proceed towards Arjuna; Karna insultingly challenged Bhīma, who turned back and encountered Karna; a fierce battle ensued between Bhīma and Karna, whom Bhīma deprived of his steeds and chariot. Karna mounted another chariot (VII, 131). Continuation of the battle between Karna and Bhīma, who recollected the woes in Virāṭa's city, etc. (σσ). Bhīma's horses of the hue of bears and Karna's of the hue of swans mingled together; Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna became anxious for Bhīma; a great carnage took place (VII, 132). Dhṛtarāṣṭra's eulogy on Bhīma (ττ); Karna was capable of encountering D., As., and men. Sanjaya continued: Bhīma again deprived Karna of his steeds and driver. Duryodhana dispatched his brother Durjaya to rescue Karna; Bhīma slew Durjaya; Karna wept (VII, 133). Riding upon another chariot Karna again encountered Bhīma, who again deprived him of his chariot. Duryodhana dispatched his brother

Durmukha to rescue Karna; Bhima slew Durmukha, upon whose chariot Karna mounted, weeping; Karna fled, carried away by his steeds (VII, 134). Dhrtarashtra's observations on Bhima's victory over Karna (vv); "I think Destiny reigns supreme." Sanjaya called Dhrtarashtra "the root of this destruction of the world"; then he related: five brothers of Duryodhana (φφ) + Karna & Bhimasena, who slew the five brothers, resisting Karna the while (VII, 135). Karna became despondent of his life; Bhima again deprived Karna of his steeds, driver, and bow; Karna once more fled on foot; Duryodhana dispatched other brothers of his against Bhima, who slew them all (χχ). Karna wept, recollecting the words of Vidura; then, riding upon another chariot he encountered Bhima (description), who gladdened Arjuna, etc. (ψψ) (VII, 136). Karna sorrowfully surveyed the slain brothers of Duryodhana, and was hard pressed by Bhima, who was applauded by Cā., Bhūriçravas, etc. (ωω); Duryodhana dispatched seven of his brothers to the rescue of Karna; they were all slain by Bhima (ααα); Bhima lamented the death of Vikarna, who was dear to him. Then he with a shout gladdened Yudhishtira, who rushed against Drona. Beholding the slaughter of thirty-one of his brothers by Bhima, Duryodhana recollected the words of Vidura (βββ) (VII, 137). Bhima & Karna; a great carnage was caused by both (Sindhu, Sauvira, Kaurava); Cā. and Si. were amazed (VII, 138). Continuation: D., Si., G., and Vd. applauded the two combatants. Pierced by Karna, Bhima's driver sought refuge in Satyaki's chariot; Karna cut off Bhima's weapons; Bhima leaped into the sky in order to snatch Karna off his chariot; Karna concealed himself on his vehicle; the Kurus and Cā. applauded Bhima; Bhima's weapons being exhausted he fled away from Karna and defended himself with the bodies of the elephants slain by Arjuna; but, recollecting Arjuna's vow, he did not take the life of Karna; and Karna, recollecting his promise to Kunti, did not take the life of Bhima, whom he touched with the end of his bow and insulted with his speech. Arjuna then forced Karna to fly, and speeded a terrible shaft after him when he was retreating, which was cut off by Açvatthāman, whom Arjuna then forced to flee away (VII, 139). Dhrtarashtra lamented (γγγ). Sanjaya related: Satyaki followed Bhima; Alambusha (rājavar, v. 15828) & Satyaki, who slew him (!), and then proceeded, with his steeds of the Sindhu breed, towards Arjuna; Duṣṣāsana and the Dhrtarāshtras & Satyaki, who slew the steeds of Duṣṣāsana, gladdening Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa (VII, 140). Fifty Trigarita princes & Satyaki, who made them flee away, and then, passing through the *Çarasena*s and *Kalinga*s, approached Arjuna, and was eulogized (δδδ) by Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna was not pleased with the arrival of Satyaki on account of his anxiety for Yudhishtira (εεε) (VII, 141). Bhūriçravas & Satyaki; they mutually addressed (ζζζ) and challenged each other, whereafter the fight began; each deprived the other of his chariot, then they fought with swords, then with fists and hands (descriptions); Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to protect the tired Satyaki against Bhūriçravas, who was fresh; Satyaki succumbed to Bhūriçravas; Arjuna cut off one of the arms of Bhūriçravas (VII, 142). Bhūriçravas rebuked Arjuna for his unrighteous feat (ηηη); Arjuna justified his conduct (θθθ). Bhūriçravas (δ), abandoning Yuyudhāna, desired to die in prāya (description); he acknowledged the justice of Arjuna's plea, and was blessed by Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa (ιι). Though forbidden by Kṛṣṇa, etc. (κκκ), Satyaki slew Bhūriçravas sitting in prāya. The warriors did not applaud Satyaki; Si., Cā., men, and D. applauded Bhūriçravas; the soldiers thought that it had been ordained by the Creator that it should be so. Satyaki justified his conduct (λλλ), quoting Valmiki (VII, 143). Dhrtarashtra asked Sanjaya how Satyaki could be humiliated by Bhūriçravas. Sanjaya related the history of Çini (ς) and of Somadatta, and praised the Vṛṣṇi heroes, vanquishers of the very D., Dā., G., As., Y., U., and Rā. (VII, 144). Arjuna proceeded to Jayadratha's chariot. Duryodhana, etc. (μμμ) & Arjuna (ννν). Duryodhana prevailed upon Karna to protect Jayadratha (vvv); Karna promised to do his best (ξξξ); Duryodhana, etc. (ooo) (also Açvatthāman) (f) & Arjuna (+ Bhimasena and Yuyudhāna); Si., Cā., and Pn. applauded Karna and Arjuna. Arjuna deprived Karna of his steeds, chariot, and driver. Açvatthāman made Karna ride on his chariot. Arjuna invoked the Vāruṇa weapon; he caused a great carnage (VII, 145). Arjuna employed the Aindra weapon, etc. (description). Arjuna & Jayadratha (+ ooo); Arjuna cut off Jayadratha's standard and slew his driver; Jayadratha was placed by six chariot warriors in their midst. Kṛṣṇa covered the sun by means of his yoga power, so that all, except Arjuna, thought the sun to have set, and he urged Arjuna to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay; Arjuna caused such a carnage that the warriors abandoned Jayadratha in fear and fled away; Kṛṣṇa again urged Arjuna to cut off Jayadratha's head without delay, telling him of Jayadratha's father Vṛddhakshatra (g), who was still engaged in penances outside Samantapañcaka; Arjuna should make the head fall upon the lap of Vṛddhakshatra himself, lest his own head should crack in 100 pieces; this Arjuna did, and as the head fell down from Vṛddhakshatra's lap the latter's head split into 100 pieces. Kṛṣṇa then withdrew the darkness created by him; Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna blew their conches, and Bhima, by a tremendous shout, communicated to Yudhishtira the message of victory. Yudhishtira & Drona, after the sun had set; and Arjuna fought with many mighty chariot warriors (VII, 146). Kṛpa + Açvatthāman & Arjuna; Kṛpa was carried away by his driver, and Açvatthāman fled. Arjuna, grieved at Kṛpa's death-like swoon (πππ), Karna & Arjuna + Satyaki + the two Pāṇḍala princes (Arjuna's wheel protectors). Kṛṣṇa told Arjuna to avoid Karna because the latter had yet the lance that Indra had given him. Karna & Satyaki (upon Kṛṣṇa's chariot with Dāraka and the horses Çaibya, etc. (ppp), Kṛṣṇa having known before the encounter that Satyaki would be deprived of his chariot by Bhūriçravas, and having therefore ordered Dāraka to let his chariot be equipped the next day, and now calling Dāraka by blowing his conch in the Rahabha note; neither D., G., Y., U., Rā., nor men could conquer the two Kṛṣṇas; D. with Brahmān and Si. knew their prowess); Yudhāmanyu and Uttamañjaya (abandoning Arjuna's chariot) & Karna; such a battle had never been heard of even between D., G., As., U., or Rā.; D., G., and Dā. looked at; Satyaki slew Karna's charioteer and steeds. Vṛṣasena, etc. (sss), & Satyaki. Karna ascended the chariot of Duryodhana. Satyaki did not slay the Dhrtarāshtras (Duṣṣāsana, etc.) on account of the vow of Bhimasena. Açvatthāman, Kṛtavarma, etc., were all vanquished by Satyaki with only one bow; "in this world there are only three mighty bowmen: Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna, and Satyaki," said Sanjaya. The younger brother of Dāraka soon brought another chariot (description) to Satyaki; Satyaki ascended it, and Dāraka went to Kṛṣṇa. A new chariot was brought for Karna also. Sanjaya told Dhrtarashtra that thirty-one of his sons had been slain by Bhīmasena, etc. (१११) (VII, 147). Insulted by Karna, Bhīma addressed Arjuna in order to induce the latter to permit him to slay Karna; Arjuna rebuked Karna (१११), and vowed to slay his son Vṛhasena in his presence. Kṛṣṇa congratulated Arjuna (१११), who attributed the victory to Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa pointed out to Arjuna the results of that day's battle; then he blew Pāñcājanya and went and informed Yudhishtira (VII, 148). Kṛṣṇa congratulated Yudhishtira, who attributed the success to Kṛṣṇa's grace (१११); Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna once more congratulated him (१११); then Bhīma and Sātyaki, whom Yudhishtira congratulated (१११) and embraced (VII, 149). Duryodhana's despondency (१) and cheerless address to Droṇa (१), whom he censured for treating Arjuna leniently; "it seems that Karna only now wishes us victory" (VII, 150). Droṇa's reply to Duryodhana (१); he vowed to slay all the Pāñcālas before doffing his armour; he asked Duryodhana to tell Açvatthāman to avenge himself on the Somakas, etc., even at the risk of his life. Then he proceeded against the Pāñdavas (VII, 151). Duryodhana communicated to Karna his suspicions about Droṇa's sincerity (१); Karna removed Duryodhana's suspicions of Droṇa (१), and attributed the ill-success of the Kurus to destiny. Meanwhile the Pāñdava divisions appeared for battle, and a fierce battle ensued (VII, 152).

Jayadrathavimokshana(m) ("the setting free of Jayadratha"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 325 (i.e. Jayadrathavimokshanaparvan).

[Jayadrathavimokshanaparvan] ("the setting free of Jayadratha," the 47th of the minor parvas of Mhbh.). (Cf. Jayadrathavimokshana.) § 523 (cf. Draupadīhar.): Bhīma seized Jayadratha by the hair, and holding him high up in the air thrust him on the ground, etc., and regretted that Yudhishtira had forbidden to kill him. He then with his arrow shaved Jayadratha's head, leaving only five tufts of hair, and made him promise to say in public assemblies, "I am the slave of the Pāñdavas." They then bound him and thrust him into the chariot; then they drove towards the hermitage and presented him to Yudhishtira. Yudhishtira and Draupadī set him free with his army. § 524: Jayadratha went to Gaṅgādvarā, and pleased Çiva so that he deigned to accept his offerings in person and granted him a boon. Jayadratha asked that he might be able to defeat in battle all the five Pāñdavas on their chariots. This Çiva declared to be impossible, as Arjuna (b) was invincible, and was protected by Kṛṣṇa, who was Vishṇu (c). Çiva then briefly reminded Jayadratha of four incarnations of Vishṇu (d). "Thou shalt, however, be able to vanquish for a single day only the rest of Yudhishtira's forces and the four Pāñdavas, but not Arjuna." Then Çiva vanished with Umā, Jayadratha returned home, and the Pāñdavas continued to dwell in Kāmyaka (III, 272).

[Jvarotpatti(h)] ("the origin of fever"). § 694b (Mokshadh.): Bhīṣma said: In days of yore there was a summit of Meru, named Jyotiṣṭhā, belonging to Savitṛ (Sāvitrām). There Īva used to sit with Pārvatī, waited upon by D., V., etc. (a). After some time the Prajāpati Dakṣa commenced to perform a sacrifice, whither all the gods headed by Indra, with the permission of Īva, repaired mounted on their chariots, proceeding to that spot whence the Gangā is said to issue. Pārvatī asked why Īva did not himself proceed thither, and was told that in days of yore the deities made an arrangement in consequence of which no share was assigned to Īva of offerings in sacrifices. He was filled with grief. Īva ordered Nandin to wait there, and summoning all his yoga force, he, with all his terrible followers, came and destroyed that sacrifice (description); it assumed the form of a deer and tried to fly away through the skies, pursued by Īva with bow and arrow. A drop of sweat fell from his forehead down on the earth; there appeared a terrible fire, whence issued a dreadful being of very short stature, etc. (description), who consumed the embodied form of sacrifice and then attacked D. and R., who fled in all directions. The earth began to tremble, etc. Brahmān appeased Īva by promising him a share of the sacrificial offerings; the being that had sprung from his sweat should be distributed among all creatures as fever (description of the distribution). - Kaca, a brahman, the son of Brhaspati. § 145 (Sambhavar.): Janamejaya said: How did Yayāti get Devayāni? Vaiçampāyana related: In the many battles between the gods and the Asuras, the gods had for their purohita Brhaspati Āngirasa, and the Asuras Uçanas Kāvya (i.e. Çukra). As Uçanas, by his science Sañjivini, restored the fallen Dānavas to life, and Brhaspati was unable to revive the fallen gods, the gods prevailed upon Brhaspati's son Kaca to repair to Uçanas and conciliate him and his daughter Devayāni and learn the Sañjivini. K. then repaired to the capital of Fyahaparcan, the king of the Dānavas, and promising to practise brahmacharya for 1,000 years he was accepted by Uçanas as his pupil. Young as he was he, by singing and dancing and playing on instruments, etc., soon gratified Devayāni. After 500 years the Dānavas, having discovered who he was, slew him, and one time hacked his body to pieces and gave it to wolves and jackals, another time they pounded it into paste and mixed it with the waters of the ocean, but both times Devayāni prevailed upon Uçanas to restore K. to life by the Sañjivini, summoning him and saying, "Come." Then slaying him for the third time they burned the body and mixed the ashes with the wine (surā) which Uçanas drank. As Devayāni again asked her father to revive K., Uçanas said: "It is of no use, as he is always killed again; thou art always worshipped by the Brāhman (i.e. the Veda, Nil.), the brahmans, the gods including Indra, the Vasus, the Aśvins, the enemies of the gods and the whole world, therefore do not grieve for a mortal." As Devayāni said she would starve, Çukra imparted the Sañjivini to K., who, though reduced to powder, remembered everything. K. then came out, ripping open the stomach of Çukra and then revived Çukra by the Sañjivini. Uçanas declared that henceforth that brahman who would drink wine should be reckoned to have committed the sin of slaying a brahman. K. stayed with Çukra for 1,000 years (I, 76). When K. was about to return to the gods Devayāni asked him to become her husband, and as he refused (saying that she was a sister to him) she cursed him, saying that his science should bear no fruit. K. again cursed Devayāni, saying that no ṛshi's son should take her hand, and that his science should bear fruit, if not to himself, at least to him to whom he might impart it. Then he went to the abode of Indra, and the gods declared that he should become a sharer with them in sacrificial offerings (I, 77): I, 76, 3199 (jyeshtham putram Brhaspatēḥ), 3199 (Brhaspatisutaḥ), 3201 (ṛsher Āngirasaḥ putram putram sūkshād Brhaspatēḥ), 3203, 3204, 3209, 3212, 3213, 3214, 3215, 3216, 3219 (Brhaspatisutaḥ), 3223, 3226, 3227, 3228 (Brhaspatēḥ sutaḥ), †3232, (†3237), †3239, †3240, †3241, †3244, †3245, †3248, †3253, 3255; 77, (3261), 3265, (3267), 3271, (3272), 3276, 3277.—§ 146 (Devayāni): I, 78, 3279; 80, 3335 (Āngirasaḥ, all. to § 145).—§ 637 (Rajadh.): XII, 47γ, 1596 (among the ṛshis who surrounded Bhishma).—§ 734 (Ānuçāsanik.): XIII, 26a, 1765 (do.). Kairātaparvan ("the section treating of the Kirāta"), the 33rd of the minor parvans of Mbhr., forming an episode to Arjuna's journey to the abode of Indra (cf. Kairāta). § 331. It is anew related how Arjuna set out from the Kāmyaka wood towards the north; he entered a terrible forest (description), resorted to by Siddhas and Cāraṇas, and then proceeded to the Himavat (description). For four months he practised austerities (specified), until the ṛshis made representations about it to Čiva, who dismissed them after having removed their fears (III, 38). Then Čiva with his bow and arrows, in the guise of a Kirāta, accompanied by Umā in the guise of a Kirāta woman, by merry spirits (bhūtaih), and thousands of women, approached Arjuna as he was about to kill Māka, a son of Danu, who in the form of a boar would have killed Arjuna. Arjuna and Čiva at the same time pierced Māka with their arrows, and killed him; when dying he again assumed his rakṣasa form; then they fought against each other, first with arrows, then with the very bows, then with swords, then with trees and stones, then with the fists, and then by clasping each other; at last Arjuna lost his senses, and was almost reduced to a ball of flesh; when he regained consciousness he made a clay image of Čiva, which he worshipped with a garland, which then appeared on the head of the Kirāta; he thus learned that it was Čiva, and prostrated himself at his feet. Čiva declared that Arjuna's prowess was equal to his own, promised to give him his weapon, and gave him 'eye' (eakṣus), so that he behold him in his true form, together with Umā.—§ 332: Arjuna then fell on his knees and worshipped him, saying: "O Kapardin! etc." (v. Mahādevastava) (III, 39).—§ 333: Čiva said that Arjuna (b) was in a former life Nara, etc. When granted a boon, Arjuna asked Čiva to give him the Piṣupata weapon named Brahmaçiras (c). Having purified himself he was instructed in its use on the condition that he should not hurl it against a human being, for then it would destroy the universo. The earth trembled, etc. The gods and Dānavas beheld the weapon in its bodily shape standing by the side of Arjuna. When Arjuna had been touched by Čiva, all that was evil in his body was dispelled. Having said to Arjuna, "Go thou into heaven," Čiva went up into the skies accompanied by Umā (III, 40).—§ 334: Then Arjuna was on the Himavat visited by the Lokapālas, viz., Varuṇa (blue as lapis lazuli), together with rivers, Nāgas, Daityas, and Sādhyas; Kubera, who dwells on Kailāsa, golden-coloured (jambūnadavapuḥ), accompanied by Yakṣas; Yama, with staff in hand (daṇḍapāṇiḥ), illuminating the three worlds, and the Guhyakas, Gandharvas, and Nagas, accompanied by those lords of the creation (lokabhāvanaiḥ) the Pitṛs; further Čakra, with Mahendrāṇi, mounted on the neck of Airāvata, and surrounded by the gods, and eulogized by Gandharvas and ṛshis. Each of them occupied a particular summit of Himavat (Yama to the south, Varuṇa to the west).

They granted him 'sight' (ākṣhi), that he might see them. Yama said that Arjuna would defeat the Nivātakavāsas, etc., and gave him his irresistible staff (daṇḍa) as a weapon. Varuṇa (b) gave him his irresistible nooses. Kubera said that in bygone kalpas Arjuna had always gone through ascetic austerities along with them, and gave him his favourite weapon Antardhāna (c). Indra said he would descend to earth in his chariot with Mātali as his charioteer, and taking him to heaven grant him all his celestial weapons (III, 41).

Kalmāshapāda, Saudāsa (also named Mitrasaha), king of Ayodhyā and husband of Madayanti. § 188 (Madayanti):

I, 122, 4737 (being himself unable to beget children K. urged Madayanti to go to Vasishṭha, who beget Açmaka on her, cf. § 225).—§ 224 (Vāsishṭha): The rājārshi of the race of Ikshvāku Kalmāshapāda (whose sacrifices Viçvāmītra had desired to perform) once when hunting met the viprarshi Çaktri, the eldest of Vasishṭha's 100 sons, and ordered him to stand out of his way, and as Çaktri did not yield K. struck him with his whip. Çaktri then cursed him, saying: "From this day thou shalt be a rākshasa, eating human flesh." The king began humbly to propitiate the ṛshi, but Viçvāmītra (between whom and Vasishṭha there was a dispute about K., whom they both wanted as their yājya) passed before them without being seen, and caused a rākshasa named Kiṅkara to enter the king. Viçvāmītra then went away. At this time a hungry brahman beheld in the wood K., who was terribly afflicted by the rākshasa, and asked the king for some food with meat. K. asked him to stay there for a moment, and having roved for some time at pleasure at last entered his inner apartments. When waking at midnight and remembering his promise, he summoned his cook, and as the cook did not find any meat K. said: "Feed him with human flesh." The cook then took human flesh from the place where the executioners were, and offered it to the hungry brahman. Seeing with his spiritual power of vision (siddha-cakshuṣa) what kind of food it was, the brahman in anger said that the king himself should take a fancy to such food and wander over all the earth alarming all creatures. The curse on the king, being thus repeated a second time, became very strong, and possessed by the rākshasa the king lost all his senses. A while after K., beholding Çaktri, in order to revenge himself for the curse slew him and ate him up. [Kapota-lubdhaka-samvāda(h)] ("the conversation between the dove and the fowler"). § 651b (Āpaddh.): Bhārgava related: A cruel fowler (description) was surprised in the forest by a great storm (description); the paths of the forest were all submerged; he caught a she-pigeon and immured her in a cage; when the sky cleared he passed the night under a tree, having bowed down to the deities that had this tree for their resort (XII, 143). In one of the branches of that tree the male pigeon lamented the loss of his wife (XII, 144). The she-pigeon answered him from within the hunter's cage, telling him to do the duties of hospitality to the fowler (XII, 145). The male pigeon welcomed the fowler, who was stiff with cold, by igniting a fire; as the fowler was hungry, the pigeon (quoting R., D., and P.) himself entered the fire, at which the fowler became terrified, thinking of his own cruel life (XII, 146), expressed his repentance, and set at liberty the she-pigeon, etc. (XII, 147). The she-pigeon lamented for the death of her spouse; then she threw herself into the blazing fire; the couple of pigeons ascended to heaven (XII, 148). The fowler took to rigid penances, perished in a forest conflagration, and beheld himself in heaven in splendour like Indra among Y. and G. and Si. (XII, 149).

He grew very strong and soon mastered the vedāṅgas; there was nothing he would not give to the brahmins. In order to benefit Arjuna, Indra in the guise of a bruhman obtained his ear-rings and armour, and in return gave him a lance with which he could slay any one amongst gods, Asuras, men, Gandharvas, and Rākshasas. Because he took off (utkrtya) his natural armour and ear-rings he was called Vaikartana Karna. He was the friend and counsellor of Duryodhana: I, 66, [2776 (Vasusheneti . . . viçrutam)], 2780, 2782 (Vaikartanaḥ), 2783.—§ 175 (Karna-sambhava): I, 111, 4399, 4408, 4411 (Vaikartanaḥ; repetition of § 131).—§ 197 (Bhīmasena-rasapāna): I, 129, 5068.—[§ 203 (Droṇa): I, 132, 5221 (Sataputrac ca Rādheyah, became the disciple of Droṇa in the Dhanurveda).—§ 208a (Astradarçana): When the exhibition had nearly ended there was heard proceeding from the gate the slapping of arms like to the roar of thunder. Then K. (the son of Pṛitha and the Sun) proceeded with his natural mail and ear-ring and bowed to Droṇa and Kṛpa. Having spoken disdainfully to Arjuna, at which Duryodhana was filled with delight, he then, with the permission of Droṇa, did all that Arjuna had done before. Duryodhana and his brothers in joy embraced K. K. asked for a single combat with Arjuna, who rebuked him. Droṇa gave his consent to the encounter. Indra covered Arjuna with clouds, while the Sun dispersed the clouds from K., who remained visible, surrounded by the rays of the Sun. When Kṛpa asked K. to tell his lineage ("sons of kings never fight with men of inferior lineage," v. 5411) K. was ashamed, but Duryodhana (saying, "The origin of kings is, according to the çāstras, threefold—persons of noble blood, heroes, and those who lead an army," v. 5413) immediately installed K. king of the Aṅgas (I, 136). Then Adhiratha entered the lists and embraced K. as his son Bhīmasena, seeing this, scoffed at K. as the son of a charioteer (sūta), but was reprimanded by Duryodhana ("the origin of heroes and rivers is always unknown," examples: the fire that rises from the water; the thunderbolt (vajra) that was made from the bones of Dadhica; Guha, i.e. Skanda, is named the son of Agni or of the Kṛttikāḥ or of Rudra or of Gaṅga; Viçvāmitra and other kshatriyas who became brahmins; Droṇa and Kṛpa). When the sun went down Duryodhana led K. out of the arena. Kuntī had recognized K. as her son and was pleased at his success. Duryodhana banished his fear of Arjuna when he had obtained Karna's friendship (I, 137): I, 136, 5379, 5381, 5390, 5391, (5393), 5395, 5396, (5397), 5400, 5403, 5404, 5412, 5415, 5418; 137, 5420, 5426, 5438, 5440, 5442, 5443.—§ 209 (Drupadaçāsana): I, 138, 5449, 5463 (assisted by his pupils, and among those by K., Droṇa vanquished Drupada).—§ 213 (Jatugṛhap.): I, 141, 5635, 5655 (Vaikartanaḥ), 5674; 149, 5849; 151, 5920.—§ 214 (Hidimbavadhap.): I, 155, 6083 (Ghaṭotkaca was destined to become the antagonist of K. and to be killed with his dart (çakti), which could only slay one person, so that Arjuna might be saved).—§ 231 (Svayamvarap.): I, 185, 6957 (Duryodhana-purogamāç ca sa-K^oāḥ Kuravaḥ, came to the svayamvara of Draupadī).—§ 232 (do.): I, 186, 6984.—§ 233 (do.): I, 187, †7019, †7025, [†7026 (Arka-putram)], †7027 (rejected by Draupadī); [188, 7051 (Rādheyah)].—§ 234 (do.): I, 190, 7089, 7091, 7094 (Vaikartanaḥ), 7098 (Vaikartanaḥ), (7100), 7104, 7106 (Rādheyah), 7113, †7155 (encounter with the Pāṇḍavas at the svayamvara of Draupadī).—§ 241 (Vidurāgamanap.): I, 200, 7373; 202, (7416).—§ 242 (do., Ambuvica): I, 204, (7472).—§ 243 (Vidurāgamanap.): I, 204, 7486; 205, 7490, 7516.—§ 280 (Bhīmasena): II, 30, 1092, 1093, 1094 (vanquished by Bhīmasena on his digvijaya).—§ 287 (Rājasūyikap.): II, 34, 1266 (came to the rājasūya of Yudhishtira).—§ 289 (Argāharaṇap.): II, 37, 1353.—§ 290 (Çiçupālavadhap.): II, 44, 1527 (c: the ruler of the country of the Vaṅgas and the Aṅgas (Vaṅgaṅgaviṣhayādhyakṣam), with natural ear-rings and armour, by whom Jarā-sandha was vanquished and mangled (? dehabhedam lambhitah) in a wrestling encounter).—[§ 294 (Dyūtap.): II, 48, 1712 (Sataputrac ca Rādheyah, among the allies of Duryodhana).]—§ 298 (do.): II, 58, 2014 (present at the game); 65, 2184.—§ 299 (do.): II, 67, †2241; 68, (2277) (declared Draupadī to be forfeited).—§ 301 (do.): II, 68, 2338 (declared Draupadī to be a dāsi and ordered Duḥçāsana to drag her away); 71, (2379) (told Draupadī to select another husband); 72, 2416.—§ 302 (Anudyūtap.): II, 74, 2456.—§ 304 (do.):

After a year the brahman gave her a mantra (Atharvaçirāsi çrutam), by which she might invoke the gods (III, 305). When she at the time of her seasons saw the sun's orbit she became possessed of celestial power of vision, and beheld Sūrya with his coat of mail and his ear-rings and invoked him. By way of yoga he divided himself into two, one of whom appeared before Kuntī. At first Kuntī was frightened (III, 306), but Sūrya reassured her, saying: "Thou shalt remain a virgin after having gratified me, and thy son shall have the ear-rings and the coat of mail, made of amṛta, that have been given to me by Aditi," etc.; then he entered her by virtue of yoga (III, 307). This happened in the bright fortnight of the tenth month (çukle daçottare pakṣhe). Except her nurse nobody else knew about the matter; when the child was born she consulted with her nurse and placed it in a box on the river Açvanadi, imploring protection from Varuṇa, Sūrya, A., V., R., S., V.-D., M., diçah, digīçvarāḥ, I., etc.; from Açvanadi the basket floated to the river Çarmanvatī, thence to the Yamunā, and so on to the Gangā, to the town of Campa, in the country of the Angas (III, 308), ruled by the sūta Adhiratha (the husband of Radhā), who was childless. They adopted the child and called him Vasushoṇa and Vṛsha (only afterwards he was named K.). After having adopted K., Adhiratha had other sons begotten by himself. When K. had grown up he was sent to Hastinapura, and acquired the four kinds of weapons from Droṇa, Kṛpa, and Rāma, and became the friend of Duryodhana, but was intent on injuring the Pāṇḍavas, especially Arjuna. Yudhishtira was afraid of him. When K. after rising from the water at noon worshipped Sūrya, brahmins used to solicit him for wealth, and there was nothing that he would not give away to the brahmins (III, 309). Indra in the guise of a brahman appeared before him, asked him for his coat of mail, and gave him instead a dart (Vasavi), which could not be baffled and which, in the hands of Indra, destroyed the Daityas and then returned to him. "This dart can only slay one powerful enemy of thine and then it will return to me, but it will not be that one which thou seekest to slay, for he is protected by Kṛṣṇa." K. cut the coat of mail and ear-rings off his person, Indra having granted him that his body thus disfigured should not become unsightly. Gods and men and Dānavas raised a leonine roar. For this feat he was called Karna. The Dhṛtarāṣṭras became distressed and the Pāṇḍavas were filled with joy. Having rescued Kṛṣṇa from Jayadratha and listened to the ancient stories recited by Mārkaṇḍeya, the Pāṇḍavas returned from Kāmyaka to Dvaitavana (III, 310): III, 303, 16998; 309, 17172, 17173 (Sūryasambhavaḥ), 17175; 310, (17183), 17184, 17190, 17196, 17197, (17198), 17199, 17200, (17203), (17206), 17208, 17209, (17211), †17213, †17214, †17216, †17216, †17217.—§ 548 (Āraṇyakap.): III, 315, 17453.—§ 551 (Kicakavadhap.): IV, 21, 646.—§ 552 (Goharanap.): IV, 25, 867; 26, 890, 897 (recommended to inquire about the Pāṇḍavas); 30, 973, 977, 984, 990 (Vaikartanasya, recommended to undertake the expedition for ravishing the cattle of Virāṭa); 35a, 1150; 36, 1176 (Vaikartanam); 38, 1238, 1243; 39, (1299); 47, 1472; 48, (1507) (promised to slay Arjuna); 49, 1540, 1547, 1551; 50, 1554; 51, 1583, 1587, 1599; 52, 1624, 1629 (Sataputrah, in the van of Duryodhana's array); 53, 1643; 54, †1666, †1682, †1685, †1687, †1689 (Vaikartanam), †1690, †1692, †1693 (is defeated by Arjuna); 55, 1734, 1735, 1750 (Vaikartanaḥ, on the top of his standard there was the device of an elephant's rope, nāgakakeṣa); 59, 1908, 1917, 1919, 1921 (Arjuna rushed towards K.); 60, 1923, 1924, 1930, (1931), 1939, 1940, 1943, 1944, 1946, 1947 (is defeated by Arjuna); 63, 2021, 2024; 66, †2107, †2117 (stupefied by Arjuna, who caused Uttara to bring K.'s yellow robes away); 68, 2168, 2232 (padam padasahasreṇa yaç caran° nūparā-dhnyāt).—§ 553b (Yudhishtira): IV, 70, 2286.—§ 554 (Sainyodyogap.): V, [2, †31 (sa-Sataputram)]]; 3, 60; [4, 65 (Rādheya-Saubalan)].—§ 555 (do.): V, 8, 214 (Çalya

Karna¹, son of Dhṛtarāshṭra. § 130 (Ançāvat.): I, 67, 2730 (enumeration of the sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra). — § 182 (Dhṛtarāshṭraputranāmāk.): I, 117, 4542 (do.). — § 583 (Bhishmuvadhāp.): VI, 77c, 3344 (among other sons of Dhṛtarāshṭra, who are attacked by Bhīmasena).

Karnaçravas, a brahman. § 324 (Dvaitavanapraveça): III, 26a, 986 (among the brahmins who waited upon Yudhisṭhira).

[Karna-digvijaya(h)] ("subjection of the earth by Karna"). § 515 (Ghoshay.). When Duryodhana had come to Hastinapura, Bhishma said to him that, as he had told him before, this journey did not please him, and advised him to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas. Duryodhana laughed and sallied out with Çakuni, followed by Karna and Duḥçāsana. When Bhishma, ashamed, had gone away, they returned and began to consult. Karna complained of the partiality of Bhishma for the Pāṇḍavas, and promised to conquer the world for Duryodhana. Duryodhana gladly accepted his offer, and on an auspicious lunar day, etc., Karna set out (III, 253). Karna, surrounded by a large army, first made Drupada and the princes that were under him pay tribute. He then successively conquered the north (Bhagadatta, the kings inhabiting the Himavat), the east (the Angas, Vāṅgas, Kāṅgas, Māṇḍikās (B. Çuṇḍika), Mithilās, Māgadhās, Karkakhaṇḍas, Avāçtras, Yodhyas, Akikshattra, Vatsabhūmi, Kevali, Mṛttikivati, Mohana, Pattana, Tripurā, Koçala), the south (Rukmin, the Pāṇḍya mountain, Keralu, Nila, the son of Veṇudāri, Çaiçupāla, the Avantyas, the Vṛshnis, etc.), and the west (Yāçanas, Barbaras, etc.), with the Mlecchas, the mountaineers, Bhadras, Rohitakas, Āgneyas, Mālavas, Çaçakas, Nagnajit, etc. Having returned to Hastinapura, he was highly praised by Duryodhana and Dhṛtarāshṭra, who sat with Gāndhārī (III, 254).

Karnanirvāka, a muni. § 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 245β, 8901.

Karnaparvan ("the section relating to Karna," the 8th of the greater and the 79th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). § 4 (Anukram.): I, 1, 90 (°sitaiḥ pushpaiḥ). — § 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 346. — § 11 (do.): I, 2, 542, 549. — § 604: THE NIGHT AFTER DROṆA'S DEATH, AND THE SIXTEENTH MORNING, AND BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH DAYS. After Droṇa's death the Kuru warriors in grief, with Duryodhana at their head, repaired to Açvatthāman. When night came (!) they proceeded to their tents, but could not sleep (a); they (a) passed that night together in Duryodhana's tent, reflecting (β). When morning came they rose and performed their customary rites. Arranging their troops they proceeded to battle, making Karna their leader. The Pāṇḍavas also proceeded to battle. Karna fought for two days and was then slain by Arjuna. Saṅjaya repaired to Hastinapura and informed Dhṛtarāshṭra of Karna's fall. Janamejaya inquired about Dhṛtarāshṭra and the details of the battle (VIII, 1). Vaiçampāyana said: After the fall of Karna, Saṅjaya set out that night for Hastinapura and spoke with Dhṛtarāshṭra (γ) (VIII, 2). Saṅjaya related the discouragement of the Kuru army after the fall of Droṇa; Duryodhana's spirited address; Karna was made generalissimo but slain by Arjuna on the second day (δ) (VIII, 3). Hearing of Karna's fall in battle, Dhṛtarāshṭra swooned away; he and the ladies were restored to their senses; Dhṛtarāshṭra inquired whether Duryodhana was still alive; Saṅjaya informed him of Duḥçāsana's slaughter (ε) (VIII, 4). Requested by Dhṛtarāshṭra, Saṅjaya recounted the names of those that had fallen and those that were still alive; Dhṛtarāshṭra once more swooned away (ζ) (VIII, 5-7). Dhṛtarāshṭra's lament for Karna (η) (VIII, 8); Saṅjaya endeavoured to comfort him; continuation of Dhṛtarāshṭra's lament (θ) (VIII, 9). — § 605. THE SIXTEENTH DAY: After Droṇa's fall the Kuravas, having fled and been rallied by Duryodhana, fought for a long time with the Pāṇḍavas (Arjuna). On the approach of the evening twilight (!) the Kuravas retired to their encampment; they held a consultation in the night; Duryodhana inquired of his counsellors as to what should next be done. Açvatthāman suggested the installation of Karna as generalissimo (ι). Duryodhana offered Karna the command, which Karna accepted, promising to slay the Pāṇḍavas (κ). Karna was installed in the command and blessed by the brahmins, and ordered the troops to be arrayed at the rise of the sun (λ) (VIII, 10). Beholding Karna, none recked the loss of Bhishma or Droṇa, etc. He formed a makara array: the tip (μ), the two eyes (ν), the head (ξ), the neck (ο), the middle (π), the left foot (ρ), the right foot (σ), the left hind-foot (τ), the right hind-foot (ω), the tail (φ). Yudhisṭhira asked Arjuna to array the Pāṇḍava army and slay Karna ("incapable of being vanquished by . . . D., A., G., K., and M.-U."). The Pāṇḍava troops were arrayed in the shape of the half-moon; the left side (χ), the right side (ψ), the middle (ω), the rear (aa); Yudhāmanyu and Uttamaujas became the protectors of Arjuna's chariot wheels, and did not quit him for a moment. Then commenced the battle (VIII, 11). A fierce slaughter on both sides (description). Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (ββ), headed by Bhīmasena & Kṣhemadhṛti (Kulātādhipatiḥ), who was slain by Bhīmasena. The Kurus fled away (VIII, 12). Nukula & Karna; Bhīmasena & Açvatthāman; Satyaki & the Kaikaya princes (brothers) Vinda and Anuvinda; King Citrāsena & Çrutakarman; Prativindhya & Citra; Duryodhana & Yudhisṭhira; Arjuna & the Samçaptakas; Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Kṛpa; Çikhaṇḍin & Kṛtavarma; Çrutakṛti & Çalya; Sahadeva & Duḥçāsana. Anuvinda was slain by Satyaki, and so was Vinda; Satyaki got upon the chariot of Yudhāmanyu, then upon another chariot; the Kaikayas fled (VIII, 13). Çrutakarman & the Abhisāra king Citrāsena, whom he slew and then he pursued his flying troops. Prativindhya & Citra, whom he slew. The Kurus fled; only Açvatthāman & Bhīmasena (VIII, 14); Si., Cā., D., and M.-r. applauded them; both were borne away insensible by their drivers (VIII, 15). Arjuna & the Samçaptakas; Si., D.-r., and Cā. applauded him, etc. Açvatthāman & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa), who fought also the Samçaptakas (VIII, 16); the Kaliṅga, Vaṅga, and Nishāda heroes attacked Arjuna with a division of elephants, which was broken; Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna not to spare Açvatthāman, who at last was borne away by his steeds and entered the army of Karna; Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna proceeded towards the Samçaptakas (VIII, 17). The Magadha chief (lord of Girivraja) Danḍadhara massacred the Pāṇḍava army. Arjuna (urged by Kṛṣṇa) & Danḍadhara (on an elephant), whom he slew; his brother Danḍa & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa), who slew him; the hostile force broke up; Arjuna proceeded once more against the Samçaptakas (VIII, 18), whom he slaughtered; Ugrāyudha's son & Arjuna, who slew him; urged by Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna smote the remnant of the Samçaptakas, hastening in order to kill Karna; Kṛṣṇa described the dismal sights of the field of battle "for the sake of Duryodhana alone". The army of Duryodhana was defeated by Pāṇḍya (VIII, 19), who regarded himself as superior to Bhishma, etc. (γγ), and was slaughtering the army of Karna, the Pulindas, etc. (δδ); Açvatthāman & Pāṇḍya (b), who employed the Vāyavya weapon; meanwhile Karna began to rout the elephant force of the Pāṇḍavas; Pāṇḍya ascended a riderless elephant and split Açvatthāman's diadem; then Açvatthāman slew him, who had given numerous steeds, men, and elephants as food to the Rā. Duryodhana and his brothers worshipped Karna (VIII, 20). Kṛṣṇa said to Arjuna that he did not see Yudhishtira; the Pāṇḍavas had retreated, and Karna was slaying the Srñjayas. The Kurus (headed by Karna) & the Pāṇḍavas (headed by Bhishmasena); Karna caused a great carnage among the Pāṇḍavas, Srñjayas, and Pāñcalas. The Pāñcala chief, etc. (εε), & Karna (VIII, 21); Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & the Āngas, etc. (ζζ); the Pāṇḍavas and the Pāñcalas come to the aid of Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Nakula, etc. (ηη), overloaded the elephants with their weapons; Sātyaki killed the elephant of the Vaṅga king and felled the rider; Sahadeva & Puṇḍra, whose elephant he slew, and then proceeded towards the Ānga chief; Nakula & the Ānga king (Mleccha king), whom he slew; the elephant-men of the Āngas + Mekalas, etc. (θθ), & Nakula; then the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (ι), rushed to the rescue of Nakula; Sahadeva slew eight elephants and Nakula many; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (κκ), overloaded the elephants with arrows; the hostile army fled away and the Pāṇḍava warriors rushed against Karna (VIII, 22). Sahadeva & Duhçāsana, who was taken away by his charioteer; Sahadeva crushed Duryodhana's division (VIII, 23). Karna & Nakula; both the Somakas and Kurus were greatly afflicted; Nakula fled on foot; Karna pursued him and placed his stringed bow around his neck, but let him escape, recollecting the words of Kuntī; Nakula in great shame proceeded towards Yudhishtira's chariot, which he ascended. Karna at noon made a great slaughter among the Pāñcalas and the Srñjayas, and pursued them (VIII, 24). Uluka & Yuyutsu, who was vanquished and mounted another chariot. Uluka slaughtered the Pāñcalas and the Srñjayas. Çrutakarman (Dhrtarashtra) & Çatanika; both were deprived of their chariots and retired; Çrutakarman mounted the chariot of Vivinça, Çatanika that of Prativindhya. Çakuni & Sutasoma, who was deprived of his chariot, but contended on foot with Çakuni, who fought from his chariot; the Si, etc., were highly pleased; Sutasoma went to the chariot of Çrutakirti; Çakuni slew many of the Pāṇḍava army (VIII, 25). Kṛpa & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, who got bewildered and let his charioteer carry him to Bhishmasena, pursued by Kṛpa. Kṛtarvarman (the Bhoja king) & Çikhaṇḍin, who fell into a swoon, and was borne away by his charioteer; the Pāṇḍava army fled (VIII, 26). Arjuna & the Trigartas, etc. (λλ); Arjuna slew king Çatruñjaya, and Sugrūta's son, and Candradava; King Satyasena wounded Kṛṣṇa and was slain by Arjuna, who then slew Citravarma and the Samçaptakas in hundreds and thousands, and Mitrāsena, and wounded Sucarman; all the Samçaptakas attacked Arjuna, who invoked the Āindra weapon (description); the hostile army fled away almost entirely (VIII, 27). Duryodhana & Yudhishtira, who deprived him of his chariot; Karna, etc. (μμ), rushed to his aid; the other sons of Pāṇḍu surrounded Yudhishtira; the Pāñcalas & the Kauravas (description); Karna slaughtered the Pāñcalas, Arjuna the Trigartas, Bhishmasena the Kurus and their elephant division, when the sun had passed the meridian (VIII, 28); Duryodhana (on another chariot) & Yudhishtira; Duryodhana swooned away; Bhishmasena prevented Yudhishtira from slaying Duryodhana; Kṛtarvarman & Bhishmasena in the afternoon (VIII, 29). The Kurus (placing Karna at their van) & the Pāṇḍava army (and Sātyaki); Karna & Sātyaki; many Kurus came to rescue Karna, but fled away before the Pāṇḍavas, who were headed by the sons of Drupada; Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa (having said their daily prayers and worshipped Bhava) destroyed the Kurus; Duryodhana & Arjuna; Arjuna & Açvatthāman + Kṛpa, etc. (νν); Sātyaki, etc. (ξξ), & Karna, who vanquished them; Arjuna & Karna; many Kurus fled away. At the close of the day both armies withdrew; Rā, and Pç, etc., appeared (VIII, 30). Dhrtarashtra exalted the prowess of Arjuna (οο). The Kurus, in grief, took counsel of one another; Karna assured Duryodhana that he would slay Arjuna on the morrow. On the morrow they beheld an invincible array formed by Yudhishtira according to the rules of Bṛhaspati and Uçanas. Duryodhana and his troops put confidence in Karna. Dhrtarashtra's grief (ππ); Saṅjaya rebuked him by reminding him of his evil acts (ρρ). At dawn Karna repeated before Duryodhana his pledge to slaughter Arjuna; "my bow Vijaya (e) is the foremost of all weapons; . . . Arjuna is superior to me only by having Kṛṣṇa ('the Creator of the Universe') for his charioteer. the chariot given him by Agni, his steed, and his standard with the Ape." He desired to have Çalya ("who is superior to Kṛṣṇa") to drive his chariot; Duryodhana solicited Çalya (VIII, 31) to comply with Karna's wishes (σσ); Çalya took offence at the proposal (ττ); Duryodhana repeated his request in honorific words (υυ), and Çalya accepted on the condition that he might, in Karna's presence, utter whatever he desired (φφ) (VIII, 32). § 606: Duryodhana related to Çalya Tripurākyāna (q.v.), which the great R. Mārkaṇḍeya had narrated to his father. "As Brahmān, . . . the Supreme Deity acted as the driver of Rudra, so do thou restrain the steeds of Karna" (VIII, 33). He then related a story of Paraçu-Rāma (b), which a virtuous brahman had recited in the presence of his father. Rāma gave the Dhanurveda to Karna, "whom I do not think to have been born in the Sāta order, but to be the son of a god, born in the Kshatriya order and abandoned in infancy" (VIII, 34). Duryodhana said: "So did Brahmān act as Rudra's driver; the driver should be superior to the warrior; thou art selected by us as superior to Karna." Çalya said that many a time he had heard this history recited to him, and Kṛṣṇa, knowing the same, had become the charioteer of Arjuna, and would fight if Arjuna were slain. Duryodhana eulogized Karna (a) and then Çalya (etymology) as superior to Kṛṣṇa. Çalya repeated his promise and condition. Duryodhana embraced

Karna, and, requested by him, once more obtained the promise of Çalya, who embraced Duryodhana and asked their forgiveness for the words he might speak to Karna for his good; "what I shall say, in order to inspire thee confidence, is fraught with self-adulation; I am a driver like Matali himself" (VIII, 35).—§ 607: Duryodhana said to Karna: "Çalya, who is superior to Kṛṣṇa, will act as a driver, like Matali to Indra." When the morning came, Duryodhana again successfully asked Çalya to become Karna's charioteer. Karna having worshipped the chariot (which had in days of old been sanctified by a priest), they both ascended it. Duryodhana once more addressed Karna (a). Karna told Çalya to urge the steeds that he might slay Arjuna, etc. (β); Çalya endeavoured to inspire Karna with fear by eulogizing the Pāṇḍavas (VIII, 36). When Karna set out there appeared ill omens. The Kuru army, however, was filled with joy. Karna reflected and boasted (γ). Çalya ridiculed him and praised Arjuna (δ). Karna proceeded on his chariot with white steeds and tiger-skins, slaying large numbers in battle along his way, and inquired after Arjuna (VIII, 37), promising every Pāṇḍava soldier that he met that unto him who pointed out Arjuna to him he would give whatever wealth he desired. Duryodhana and the troops rejoiced; Çalya scornfully laughed, and said (VIII, 38) that Karna would get to see Arjuna without the trouble of seeking him, and asked him to abandon his desire for a single combat with Arjuna. Karna repeated his resolution, and Çalya insulted him in a long speech (VIII, 39). Karna replied angrily, describing the disreputable practices of the Madrakas (and the *Gāndhāra*s and Sindhu-Sauviras) (VIII, 40). Çalya answered by praising himself and his accomplishments as a charioteer (description), and by reciting the story of the crow and the swan (Haṃsa-kakṣya-pāṇḍya, q.v.): "Even as that crow, fed upon the remains of the dinners of the Vaiçya children, disregarded his equals and superiors, so dost thou, that art fed by the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra upon the remains of their dishes, disregard all," etc. (ε) (VIII, 41). Karna said that Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were well known to him, but did not make him afraid. The curse, however, of [Paraçu-] Rāma ruined him greatly. He dwelt, disguised as a brahman, with Rāma in former days, desirous of obtaining celestial weapons from him. Indra, as a worm, began to pierce his thigh, on which was lying the head of the sleeping Rāma; therefore he did not move. But Rāma, witnessing his patience, discovered that he was not a brahman, and cursed him, saying that this weapon would never, in the time of need, when the hour of his death came, occur to his memory. He had forgotten the weapon, but would, notwithstanding, slay Arjuna; he suspected Çalya of secret friendship with the Pāṇḍavas; he would employ the Brāhma weapon, which Arjuna would never be able to escape, if only the wheels of Karna's chariot did not sink into the earth that day; he would not take fright at Yama himself with his rod, or Varuṇa with his noose, or Kubera with his mace, or Indra with the thunderbolt. "Once upon a time, while wandering for the sake of practising with my bow Vijaya, I had heedlessly struck the calf of a brahman's homa cow; the brahman cursed me, saying that my wheel would sink into the earth in a battle when I was in great danger. The kings of the Lunar race offered to give that brahman 1,000 kine and 600 bulls, but in vain," etc. (VIII, 42). Karna said that it was in vain that Çalya tried to frighten him (ζ) (VIII, 43). Karna said that in Dhṛtarāṣṭra's abode the brahmins used to give accounts of various delightful regions and many kings of ancient times; an old brahman had said, blaming the Madrakas and the Bahikas, that they should be avoided as being out of the pale of virtue and living away from Himavat, etc. (η), but between Sindhu and its tributary rivers. On some very secret mission Karna had to live among the Bahikas, and therefore their conduct was well known to him; "there is a town Çakala, a river Āpagā, and a Bahika clan Jarttikas; the practices of these people are very censurable" (description; an example is cited of a Bahika who happened to live for some days in Kurujāṅgala, and a Rā woman in Çakala; the rivers Çatadru, etc. (θ), in the countries of the Āraṭṭas, regions without virtue and religion). "D., P., and brahmins never accept gifts from those that are fallen, or those that are begotten by Çūdras on the girls of other castes, or the Bahikas, who never perform sacrifices and are exceedingly irreligious." He mentioned three impure places (ι) (v. the note of PCR., p. 155). There were two Piçācas in the river Vipāçā, named Bahi and Ilīka; the Bahikas are the offspring of those two Pç.; they are not creatures created by the Creator. The Kārashkaras, etc. (κ), and other peoples of no religion one should always avoid; even thus did a Rā woman speak to a brahman who went to that country for bathing in sacred water and passed a single night there. The regions are called Āraṭṭāḥ, the water Bahika; the lowest brahmins have resided there from very remote times (brāhmaṇāpasadū yatra tulyakālāḥ Prajāpateḥ), without the Vedas, etc. The Prasthalas, etc. (λ), are almost as blameable in their practices (VIII, 44). Karna continued his description of the Bahikas (and Gāndhāras and Madrakas). The Āraṭṭas had been cursed by a chaste woman. The Kauravas, etc. (μ), know what the eternal religion is. Brahmān, even in the Kṛta age, had censured the practices of the country of the five rivers. K. quoted a saying of the Rā. Kalmāṣapāda, declared by the Rākṣasas to be the formula for curing a person possessed by a Rā. or killed by poison. Remarks on the Pāṇḍulas, etc. (ν), on Agni, etc. (ξ). Çalya spoke in disparagement of the Aṅgas (ο). Duryodhana restored peace between Karna and Çalya (VIII, 45).—§ 608: THE SEVENTEENTH DAY'S BATTLE. Beholding the array of the Pārthas made by Dhṛṣṭadyumna, Karna proceeded to battle and assailed Yudhisṭhira. Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired about the disposition of the Kuru forces (a). Sanjaya described the Kaurava array: right wing (β); on the right of these (γ); the left side (δ); on their left (c); in the centre at the head Karna with his sons; in the rear Duhçāsana; and behind him Duryodhana and his brothers, protected by the united Madrakas and Kekayas; Açvatthāman, etc., with Mlecchas on elephants followed behind. The array was formed according to the plan of Brhaspati. Yudhisṭhira, beholding Karna, spoke to Arjuna of the hostile array: Arjuna should proceed against Karna; Bhīmasena against Duryodhana; Nakula against Vṛṣasena; Sahadeva against Çakuni; Çatāntika against Duhçāsana; Sātyaki against Kṛtavarma; Pāṇḍya against Açvatthāman; Yudhisṭhira against Kṛpa; the Draupadeyas with Çikhaṇḍin against the rest of the Dhṛtarāṣṭras, etc. Çalya pointed out to Karna the chariot of Arjuna (b) and various omens, etc. (ξ); how the Sançaptakas threatened to slay Arjuna and the other heroes of the Pāṇḍava army (η), and he dissuaded him from trying to slay Arjuna. Meanwhile the two armies mingled fiercely in battle (VIII, 46). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sanjaya about Arjuna, the Sançaptakas, and Karna. Sanjaya related: Arjuna arrayed his troops, headed by Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna (with steeds white as pigeons); by the side of Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna the Draupadēyas. Arjuna & the Sam̐aptakas. The Pāñcālas, etc. (θ), & the Kurus; Kṛpa, etc. (ι), & the Koçalas, etc. (κ); the battle became conducive to fame, heaven, and virtue for the kshatriya, vaigya, and gūdra heroes that engaged in it. Duryodhana, etc. (λ) + Karna & the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (μ); Karna harassed Yudhishtira; fierce battle between the Kurus and the Śr̥jāyas (VIII, 47). Dhṛtarāṣṭra inquired about the particulars of Karna's encounter with Yudhishtira. Saṁjaya related: Karna attacked the Pāñcālas (and Prabhadra and Cedi) and made a great slaughter; among others he slew the five Pāñcālas Bhānūdava, etc. (ν). The protectors of Karna's chariot-wheels were his sons Sushena and Satyasena, and his eldest son Vṛshasena protected his rear. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ξ), & Karna + Karna's sons; Sushena & Bhīmasena, who pierced him with seventy arrows and then slew Karna's son Bhānuasena; Bhīmasena & Kṛpa, etc. (ο); Bhīmasena & Sushena + Karna; Sushena & Nakula + Sahadeva; Sātyaki & Vṛshasena, who was taken up by Duḥçāna on the latter's chariot, borne away, and caused to ride in another chariot; Vṛshasena & the Draupadēyas, etc. (π); Yuyudhāna & Duḥçāna, whom he deprived of his chariot, etc., but who got another chariot and fought from within the division of Karna; Karna & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, etc. (ρ); at last Karna's assailants gave way; Karna & Yudhishtira + the Cedis, etc. (σ) (VIII, 48); the Dr̥viḍas, etc. (τ), & Karna, who crushed them; Karna & Yudhishtira, etc. (υ); Yudhishtira addressed Karna in rage (φ); Karna swooned away, but recovered and slew Yudhishtira's wheel-protectors, the Pāñcāla princes Candradeva and Danḍadhara; Yudhishtira struck Sushena and Satyasena, etc.; Sātyaki, etc. (χ), & Karna, who invoked the Br̥hma weapon; Karna deprived Yudhishtira of his chariot; Yudhishtira fled, riding in another chariot with the white steeds with black hair on their tails that used to bear him, pursued by Karna (ο), who touched him with his hand, but remembered the words of Kuntī and was withheld by Çalya, but insulted Yudhishtira (ψ) and let him escape. The Cedis, etc. (ω), followed Yudhishtira; Karna made a great slaughter of the Pāṇḍava forces; Yudhishtira urged his forces to proceed against Karna, which they did, headed by Bhīmasena (+ Sātyaki) (description); the Kurus broke and fled away (VIII, 49). Duryodhana in vain tried to stop the flying troops. Then Çakuni, etc. + Karna & Bhīmasena, who let Sātyaki and Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna protect Yudhishtira; Çalya pointed out Bhīma to Karna (αα); Karna replied (ββ); Karna swooned and was brought away by Çalya (VIII, 50). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (γγ), Saṁjaya related: Urged by Duryodhana, several Kuru leaders (δδ) assailed Bhīma, who slew, among others, six sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra (εε). The other sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra fled away. Karna & Bhīmasena, whom he deprived of his chariot, but who then with his mace killed elephants and men by hundreds, among others fifty-two elephants belonging to Çakuni; next 3,000 horsemen dispatched by Çakuni, then he mounted another chariot and proceeded against Karna. Karna & Yudhishtira, whom he pursued as he was flying away; Bhīmasena & Karna; Sātyaki & Karna. Beholding Çakuni, etc. (ζζ), the Kurus rallied when the sun had reached the meridian. Fierce battle (VIII, 51); (description) (VIII, 52). Arjuna & the Sam̐aptakas, etc. (ηη); Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa) & Suçarman; Arjuna repeatedly invoked the Nāga weapon, paralyzing the legs (encircled with snakes) of the Sam̐aptakas; Suçarman invoked the Sauparna weapon; birds came down and devoured the snakes; Arjuna sat down, recovered, and invoked the Aindra weapon; the battle became awful (VIII, 53). Kṛtavarma, etc. (θθ), began a fierce battle; Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin (+ the Śr̥jāyas); Çikhaṇḍin was deprived of his chariot and made inactive; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna proceeded against Kṛpa; Kṛtavarma & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Açvatthāman & Yudhishtira (proceeding towards the chariot of Kṛpa); Duryodhana & Nakula and Sahadeva; Karna & Bhīmasena, etc. (ιι); Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin; Suketu (the son of Citraketu) & Kṛpa; Çikhaṇḍin retreated; Kṛpa slew Suketu, whose troops fled away; Kṛtavarma & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, who made him driverless and was assailed by the Kurus (VIII, 54). Açvatthāman & Yudhishtira, etc. (κκ) (description); Prativindhya, etc. (λλ), & Açvatthāman; Sātyaki had his driver slain; Yudhishtira went away, leaving his division, against the Kurus; Açvatthāman also left the spot (VIII, 55). Karna & Bhīmasena, etc. (μμ), who, avoiding Karna, proceeded against the Kurus; Arjuna & the Sam̐aptakas; Bhīmasena & the Kauravas; Karna & the Pāñcālas; Duryodhana & Nakula and Sahadeva; Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna (in order to rescue Nakula and Sahadeva) & Duryodhana (d), who was rescued by his brothers and borne away by Danḍadhara upon the latter's chariot. Karna (having vanquished Sātyaki and desirous of rescuing Duryodhana) & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna + Sātyaki (pursuing Karna from behind) + the Pāñcālas; a fierce battle between the two armies when the sun had ascended the meridian; Karna & Vyāghraketu, etc. (νν) (description) (οο). Yudhishtira, etc. (ππ), & Karna. Bhīmasena slew the Kurus: Bāhlikas, etc. (pp) (description) (σσ). Arjuna addressed Kṛṣṇa upon beholding Karna's (ο) prowess, and seeing that the Sam̐aptakas were broken. Arjuna (and Kṛṣṇa) broke through the Kuru host. Duryodhana once more urged the Sam̐aptakas against him. Having slain 10,000 kshatriyas, Arjuna came to the further wing of the Sam̐aptakas, which was protected by the Kāmbojas; the younger brother of the Kāmboja chief Sudakṣiṇa was killed by Arjuna; the Kāmbojas, etc. (ττ), were slain. Açvatthāman & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa); Si and Cā came; Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna not to spare Açvatthāman, who swooned and was carried away by his driver; Arjuna slew the Kuru troops. Arjuna had routed the Sam̐aptakas, Bhīmasena the Kurus, Karna the Pāñcālas. Yudhishtira, pained by his wounds, had retreated a kroça (VIII, 56). Duryodhana addressed the Kuru leaders (υυ). Açvatthāman swore to slay Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna or not to doff his armour (φφ). A fierce battle commenced. D, Aps, etc., came; Aps rained flowers, etc., on the combatants (VIII, 57). Arjuna pointed out to Kṛṣṇa that the Pāṇḍava army was flying away, Karna slaying their warriors, and Yudhishtira nowhere to be seen; "the third-part of the day still remains." Arjuna proceeded to Yudhishtira (+ Śr̥jāyas); Kṛṣṇa described the field of battle to Arjuna (χχ). A terrible battle commenced (VIII, 58). The Kurus (headed by Karna) & the Śr̥jāyas (Parthas, headed by Yudhishtira); a remnant only of the Sam̐aptakas were left alive. Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna + the Pāṇḍavas (and all the kings on their side) & Karna; Sātyaki & Karna; Açvatthāman & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna; Karna & the Pāñcālas, etc. (ψψ); Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna was worsted by Açvatthāman and rescued by Arjuna; Arjuna & Açvatthāman (abandoning Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna); Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna was brought away by Sahadeva on the latter's chariot; Açvatthāman swooned on his chariot and was carried away by his driver. Arjuna proceeded towards the Sam̐aptakas (VIII, 59).

Kṛṣṇa pointed out to Arjuna that Yudhishtira was being pursued by many Dhṛtarāṣṭras, headed by Duryodhana, while the Pāṇḍavas were following in order to rescue him, and that he was in great danger, though the Kurus had been checked by Satyaki and Bhīma, because Duryodhana, etc. (ww), would break down the very mountains; "Yudhishtira is exceedingly emaciated in consequence of his fastings; he is endued with Brāhma force, but not with much of kshatriya might"; he was surrounded by the Dhṛtarāṣṭras warred with the weapons Sihāṇakarna, etc. (aaa); in the very sight of the twins, etc. (βββ), Karna was destroying the Pāṇḍava division, and rushing against Bhīmasena; having vanquished the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (γγγ), he would soon come against Arjuna, and he was protected by Duryodhana; he should be slain; Karna was rushing against Dhṛṣṭadyumna in order to exterminate the Pāṇḍavas; however, Yudhishtira was living; Bhīma (+ *Śrījaya*s and Satyaki) and the Pāṇḍavas were now conquering the Kauravas, who were flying away, Kṛpa and Karna, etc., resisting the Pāṇḍavas (headed by Dhṛṣṭadyumna); the Nishāda prince (coming on his elephant against Yudhishtira) was slain by Bhīma, who had checked three *akṣauhīni*s of Duryodhana's soldiers. Arjuna then destroyed the remnant of his foes; the Samcāptakas fled (VIII, 60). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (δδδ), Saṁjaya related: Karna, etc., & Bhīmasena + the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (εεε); Çikhaṇḍin & Karna; Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Duḥśāsana; Nakula & Vṛhasena (at the side of his father); Yudhishtira & Citrāsena; Sahadeva & Uluka; Satyaki & Çakuni; the Draupadīyas & the other Kauravas; Açvatthāman & Arjuna; Kṛpa & Yudhāmanyu; *Kṛtavarma*n & Uttamaujas; Çikhaṇḍin was deprived of his chariot by Karna and retreated; Dhṛṣṭadyumna (+ many Pāṇḍavas) & Duḥśāsana: Si. and Aps., etc., wondered. Karna endeavours to rally the retreating troops of the Dhṛtarāṣṭras. After Karna had gone away, Nakula proceeded against the Kauravas; Karna's son, avoiding Nakula, went to Karna in order to protect his chariot-wheel. Uluka was made driverless by Sahadeva and entered the division of the Trigartas. Çakuni ascended the chariot of Uluka, who took him away from Satyaki, who then routed the Kuru army. Duryodhana & Bhīmasena, who deprived him of his chariot and bow and made him fly away; the whole Kuru army attacked Bhīmasena, who scattered them. Yudhāmanyu retreated on his chariot, driving it himself. Uttamaujas sat down and was taken away by his driver. The whole Kuru army attacked Bhīmasena; Duḥśāsana and Çakuni (with an elephant force) & Bhīmasena, who made Duryodhana fly away, invoked his celestial weapons, and scattered and destroyed them (description) (VIII, 61). Arjuna (with Kṛṣṇa) appeared. Duryodhana (with half his troops in order to seize Yudhishtira) & Yudhishtira, whose warriors (ζζζ) then came to rescue him with an akṣauhīni; Karna checked them all; Sahadeva (invoking a celestial weapon) & Duryodhana; Karna began an onslaught on the troops of Yudhishtira and Dhṛṣṭadyumna; they fled away; Karna & Yudhishtira, who sat down and ordered his driver to retreat; Duryodhana and the Dhṛtarāṣṭras pursued him; but 1,700 Kṣāya troops and a body of Pāṇḍava troops checked them. Duryodhana & Bhīma (VIII, 62). Karna & the Kaikayas, who fled to Bhīmasena. Karna & Yudhishtira (who was proceeding slowly towards the Pāṇḍava encampment with Nakula and Sahadeva, the protectors of his chariot-wheels, on his two sides); Nakula and Sahadeva & Karna, who slew the steeds both of Yudhishtira and Nakula, who both ascended the chariot of Sahadeva; Çalya, in order to rescue them, exhorted Karna to fight with Arjuna, but in vain; Yudhishtira turned from the battle; Çalya once more reminded Karna of Arjuna, etc. (ηηη), and that Duryodhana was in danger from Bhīmasena. Karna then left Yudhishtira and the twins and rushed to the rescue of Duryodhana. Yudhishtira in shame retreated with the steeds of Sahadeva, with the twins, whom he then dispatched to Bhīma (VIII, 63). Açvatthāman & Arjuna; Açvatthāman employed the Aindra weapon, which Arjuna baffled with a powerful weapon created by Indra; Açvatthāman, having had his driver slain, himself guided his steeds while he fought with Arjuna; then he was brought away by his steeds. The Pāṇḍavas, repeatedly charging the Kauravas, broke their ranks and caused them to fly away in the very sight of Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons, etc. (θθθ). Duryodhana caused Karna to rally the troops; Karna, employing the Bhārgava weapon, harassed the Pāṇḍavas, who, with the Codīs, began to lose their senses. The *Śrījaya*s called upon Arjuna and Vasudeva. Arjuna spoke to Kṛṣṇa about Karna; Kṛṣṇa reminded him first to seek Yudhishtira (VIII, 64). Arjuna met with Bhīma and asked him to bring intelligence of Yudhishtira; Bhīma feared to incur the reproach of cowardice by leaving the battle; Arjuna went to Yudhishtira in the Pāṇḍava camp upon Bhīma agreeing to resist the Samcāptakas. Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa found Yudhishtira lying on his bed; thinking that Karna had been slain (VIII, 65), Yudhishtira congratulated them (ιιι) (VIII, 66). Arjuna told Yudhishtira the real motive of his arrival in camp (κκκ), and swore to slay Karna and all the foes that very day (VIII, 67). Yudhishtira censured Arjuna, thinking that he had run away from the battle, leaving Bhīma unsupported (λλλ), several times invoking him to give up Gāṇḍīva to somebody else (VIII, 68). Arjuna drew his sword in order to strike off Yudhishtira's head in fulfilment of his vow about the person who would tell him to give up Gāṇḍīva (μμμ); Kṛṣṇa addressed Arjuna on the nature of truth (ννν), relating the story of Balaka (f) and of Kauçika (g); Arjuna said he must keep his vow (ξξξ); Kṛṣṇa suggested that Arjuna by insulting Yudhishtira, by addressing him as "thou," would be regarded as having slain him (οοο) (VIII, 69). Urged by Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna insulted Yudhishtira in a long speech (πππ); then he became despondent and desired to strike off his own head; Kṛṣṇa urged him to utter his own praises, as self-praise is equal to self-destruction. Arjuna praised himself (ppp), and begged for Yudhishtira's forgiveness, promising to slay Karna and rescue Bhīma. Yudhishtira grieved, saying that Bhīmasena, not he, ought to be king. Kṛṣṇa comforted Yudhishtira and induced him to forgive both himself and Arjuna (σσσ) (VIII, 70). Speeches of Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna, and Yudhishtira on the same topic (τττ) (VIII, 71). Arjuna proceeded to slay Karna, having obtained Yudhishtira's leave; commanded by Kṛṣṇa, Dāruka had equipped the chariot. Auspicious omens. Kṛṣṇa addressed Arjuna in order to raise his spirits (υυυ) (VIII, 72); continuation (υυυ) (VIII, 73). Arjuna's cheerful reply to Kṛṣṇa (φφφ) (VIII, 74). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (xxx), Saṁjaya related: Description of the battle; Arjuna slew many. Kṛpa & Çikhaṇḍin; Satyaki & Duryodhana; *Çrutāgrava*s & Açvatthāman; Yudhāmanyu & Citrāsena; the Śrījaya Uttamaujas & Karna's son Sushena; Sahadeva & the Gāndhāra king Çakuni; Nakula's son Çatanika & Karna's son Vṛhasena; Nakula & *Kṛtavarma*n; the Pāṇḍava king Dhṛṣṭadyumna & Karna; Duḥśāsana (with the Samcāptakas in the Bharata army) & Bhīma. Uttamaujas slew Sushena. Karna & Uttamaujas, who had his steeds slain, slew the steeds of Kṛpa, etc., and ascended the chariot of Çikhaṇḍin. Çikhaṇḍin did not wish to strike Kṛpa while the latter had no chariot: Açvatthāman rescued Kṛpa. Bhīma scorched the Kuru troops with his arrows (VIII, 75). The Bharata host fled before Bhīma, who said to his charioteer Viçoka that he was anxious about Arjuna and Yudhishtira; requested by Bhīma, Viçoka took an estimate of his weapons. Bhīma once more addressed Viçoka, saying that he would that day slay all the Kurus or himself succumb, etc. (ψψψ). Viçoka pointed out to Bhīma that Arjuna was returning to battle (www). Bhīma promised to give Viçoka fourteen villages, 100 female slaves, and twenty chariots for this agreeable intelligence (VIII, 76). Arjuna and Bhīma attacked the Kaurava army with great vigour (description). Duryodhana told his troops to slay Bhīma, who made a formidable carnage among them (description). Çakuni (urged by Duryodhana) + his brothers & Bhīma; Çakuni was brought away by Duryodhana, who retreated; the troops fled away to Karna (VIII, 77). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (α'), Sanjaya related: In the afternoon Karna assailed the Somakas, and Bhīma the Dhṛtarāṣṭra troops. Karna assailed the Pāṇḍavas, etc. (β'); the Pāṇḍavas encompassed him on all sides; Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (γ'), & Karna, who vanquished them. Cedis and Matayas & Karna, who checked them; D., Si., and Cā. were gratified; the Pāṇḍava troops fled, and were attacked by the Dhṛtarāṣṭra archers. Duryodhana rejoiced; Duryodhana, etc. (δ'), slew the Pāṇḍava warriors; similarly the Pāṇḍava heroes Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (ε'), made an onslaught on the Kurus (VIII, 78). Arjuna produced a river of blood (description). Requested by Arjuna (ζ'), Kṛṣṇa took him to Karna, whom Çalya informed (η'), and who answered Çalya (η'). Requested by Karna, Duryodhana, etc. (θ'), in order to open up a path for Karna to Arjuna, speedily proceeded and attacked Arjuna, who caused a great onslaught; Açvatthāman & Kṛpa and Ugrakarma & Arjuna, who vanquished them. Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (ι'), proceeding towards Arjuna, checked the foes; the Kurus and Srñjayas slew one another (VIII, 79). Arjuna (avoiding Karna) proceeded to the rescue of Bhīma and slew the assailants of Bhīma; the Kurus fled; Arjuna informed Bhīma that Yudhishtira was well, and then proceeded; he was surrounded by ten sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra (who were all Duhṣāsana's juniors in age), whom he slew (VIII, 80). Arjuna was assailed by ninety Samçaptakas as he was proceeding towards Karna's chariot; he slew them. Many Kauravas attacked him, whom he destroyed. Then he was attacked by a force of Mlecchas, riding 1,300 elephants, commanded by Duryodhana. Arjuna made a heavy onslaught. Abandoning the small remnant of Kauravas, Bhīmasena rushed towards Arjuna and also destroyed this remnant; then he followed Arjuna in his rear; Karna was deserted by his troops; the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra repaired to Karna. Karna attacked the Pāṇḍavas (VIII, 81); Karna felled Janamejaya's driver and steeds, and cut off the bows of Çatānika and Sutasoma; Karna & Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (κ'); Ugrakarma (the commander of the Kaikya division) & Karna's son Prasena; Karna slew Ugrakarma; Prasena & Satyaki, who slew him; Karna & Satyaki + Çikhaṇḍin; Karna slew Dhṛṣṭadyumna's son and attacked Sutasoma. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to slay Karna; Arjuna proceeded with Bhīmasena; Uttamaujas, etc. (λ'), & Karna (grinding the Somakas), who vanquished them; they were rescued by the Draupadēyas; Satyaki & Duryodhana + Kṛpa, etc. (μ'); Duhṣāsana & Bhīma (VIII, 82).

Bhīma (addressing Karna, etc.) (μ') slew Duhṣāsana and drank his blood in the very sight of Duryodhana and Karna; the bystanders, with Karna's brother Citrāsena, fled away, thinking Bhīma to be a Rā.; Yudhāmanyu, etc., pursued Citrāsena; Citrāsena (turning back) was slain by him; Karna (putting the Pāṇḍava host to flight) & Nakula; Bhīmasena took up a little of Duhṣāsana's blood and drank it (ν'), addressing Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and vowing soon to slay Duryodhana (VIII, 83). Ten of Dhṛtarāṣṭra's sons (ξ') & Uhlma, who slew them. Karna was straid, but was encouraged by Çalya (ο'). Karna's son Vṛshasena & Bhīma + Nakula, who had his white steeds of the Pandya breed slain by him, and sprang upon Bhīma's chariot in the sight of Arjuna; urged by Bhīma and Nakula, Arjuna proceeded towards Vṛshasena (VIII, 84). Eleven warriors (π') + the Kulindas (upon elephants, born in Himalayan regions) & Kṛtavarma, etc. (ρ'); the Kulinda prince & Kṛpa, who slew him; the younger brother of the Kulinda prince & Kṛpa + the Gāndhāra king, who slew the Kulinda; the Kurus & the Pāṇḍus & Srñjayas; the Bhoja chief Kṛtavarma & Çatānika; Açvatthāman slew three elephants; the third brother of the Kulinda chief & Duryodhana; the Kulinda, mounting another elephant, & Kṛthā, who was slain; Vṛka & the same Kulinda, whose elephant crushed him; the son of Babhrū & the same elephant + Sahadeva's son; Babhrū fell down; the same Kulinda & Çakuni (the Gāndhāra chief), who slew him; Nakula's son Çatānika (who slew elephants, etc.) & a Kulinda warrior [on the Kaurava side], who was slain by him; Karna's son Vṛshasena & Çatānika + Arjuna, etc. (σ'); Arjuna, informing Karna and all the other Kurus headed by Duryodhana and Açvatthāman that he would slay Vṛshasena and then Karna, as Bhīma would slay Duryodhana, slew Vṛshasena; Karna & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa) (VIII, 85); Kṛṣṇa addressed Arjuna (τ'); Arjuna's reply (ν') (VIII, 86); description of Arjuna and Karna (φ'); all the inhabitants of the world were heard to differ amongst themselves: D., Dā., G., Pç., the Snakes, Rā.; As., Yatudhanas, Gh., etc., sided with Karna; the Vedas, etc. (χ'), with Arjuna; the smaller snakes all sided with Karna; V., M., Sā., R., V.-D., A., Agni, etc. (ξ'), sided with Arjuna, while all Ā. sided with Karna; the Vaiçyas, etc. (ψ'), sided with Karna; P., etc. (x'), with Arjuna; the Pretas, Pç., Rā., etc., with Karna; D.-r., B.-r., R.-r. with Arjuna, as also G. headed by Tumburu. With the Prādhēyas and Maunēyas, G. and Aps., and many wise sages, having for their vehicles wolves, etc., came in order to witness the encounter that was also witnessed by D., Dā., G., N., Y., etc., M.-r., P. (subsisting upon svadha), etc., and Brahmān with B.-r. and Prajāpatīs and Bhava. Indra wished that Arjuna should vanquish Karna; Sūrya that Karna should vanquish Arjuna. The gods urged Brahmān that the success of both should be equal, Indra that Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa should win; Brahmān and Içāna (i.e. Çiva) said that the victory of Arjuna was certain (ω'); "let Karna obtain identity with V. or M.; let him with Droṇa and Bhīṣma be worshipped in heaven." Inara acquiesced in their words. Description of Karna's and Arjuna's chariots. The ape on Arjuna's banner attacked the elephant's rope on Karna's banner. Kṛṣṇa and Çalya cast keen glances at each other, and so did Arjuna and Karna. Karna asked Çalya what he would do if he was slain; Çalya said that then he would slay both Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna; similarly asked by Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa said that Karna could not slay Arjuna; if so, the destruction of the universe would be at hand, and he would himself slay Karna and Chalya. Arjuna said that that very day the wives of Karna would become widows (ac') (VIII, 87). In the welkin D., N., A., Si., Y., G., Rā., Aps., B.-r., etc., looked on. The battle commenced. Duryodhana, etc. (as'), & Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa); Arjuna defeated all of them; floral showers fell, etc.; Açvatthāman told Duryodhana to make peace (ay'), but in vain (ad'); Duryodhana urged his troops (VIII, 88); description of the battle between Arjuna and Karna; Arjuna employed an Āgneya weapon, which was quenched by Karna with a Vārūṇa weapon by means of clouds, which Arjuna dispelled by a Vāyavya weapon; Arjuna employed the Āindra weapon (pastram dayitam devarājñāḥ), Karna the Bhārgava weapon. The Pāṇḍavas and Somakas & Karna, who slew them. Seeing Arjuna's weapons baffled by Karna, Bhīma urged Arjuna to put forth his strength (ac'), and so did Kṛṣṇa (ac'). Arjuna bowed to Brahmān and invoked the Brāhma weapon, which could be applied by the wind alone; Karna baffled it; urged by Bhīma, Arjuna applied a second Brāhma weapon, which caused a great carnage among the Kaurava troops (description). Karna & Bhīmasena, etc. (ay'). Arjuna shot at Karna and Chalya, and slew Sabhāpati, etc. The Kauravas urged Karna to slay Arjuna. Yudhiṣṭhira appeared in order to witness the encounter. Arjuna's bow-string broke; Karna took advantage of the interval to hit Arjuna, etc. (ac'). Karna employed as arrows five snakes that had sided with Takshaka's son [i.e. Açvasena, at Khāṇḍava]; they penetrated Kṛṣṇa's body, entered the earth, and, having bathed [in Bhogavatī], returned to Karna, but were cut off by Arjuna, who then covered Karna's chariot with showers of arrows and slew 2,000 Kurus, who had been urged by Duryodhana to fight. The Kurus fled, leaving Karna to fight singly with Arjuna (VIII, 89). Karna baffled Arjuna's weapon; Karna and Arjuna shot at each other dense showers of arrows. The snake Açvasena, who was hostile to Arjuna, was passing his time in the nether region, having escaped from the conflagration at Khāṇḍava; recollecting the death of his mother he now soared up and entered into Karna's quiver in the shape of an arrow. Karna and Arjuna were fanned and sprinkled with fragrant sandal water by many Aps. staying in the welkin, and Çakra and Sārya with their hands gently brushed their faces. Karna aimed that arrow, born in Airāvata's race (i.e. the snake in the shape of an arrow), which he had long kept for Arjuna's destruction, and which lay singly in a golden quiver amid sandal dust; omens appeared, and the Lokapālas with Çakra raised loud wails. Karna did not know that the snake Açvasena had entered his arrow by the aid of his yoga powers. Chalya in vain exhorted Karna to take another arrow; Karna said: "Karna never aims an arrow twice; persons like us never become crooked warriors." Kṛṣṇa with his feet pressed Arjuna's chariot about a cubit into the earth, and the snake-arrow, failing to strike off Arjuna's head, broke his diadem (made by Svayambhū for Indra > Arjuna), incapable of being crushed by Rudra, etc. (ay'). Celestial flowers were showered upon Kṛṣṇa, etc. Açvasena appeared to Karna and asked him to shoot the same weapon again; Karna refused to avail himself of another's help or shoot the same shaft twice. Açvasena then, of his own accord, rushed on Arjuna in the shape of an arrow; Kṛṣṇa informed Arjuna that it was Açvasena, who, as an unborn child, was saved with his mother at Khāṇḍava. Arjuna cut the snake into pieces, and Kṛṣṇa with his arms raised the chariot from the earth.

Once, when Karna was stupefied and stood inactive, Arjuna was disinclined to slay him in such distress, but he was taught by Kṛṣṇa never to spare an enemy, however weak. At that time, when the hour of Karna's death had come, Kālā, approaching invisibly, in consequence of the brahman's wrath, said "the earth is swallowing up thy wheel," and the weapon that Rama had given him escaped from his memory, and the earth engulfed his left wheel. Karna began to rail at righteousness as not always protecting its worshippers. Karna invoked the Brāhma weapon, and Arjuna the Āindra weapon, which was baffled by Karna; urged by Kṛṣṇa to "shoot high weapons," Arjuna shot the Brāhma weapon. Karna cut off, one after another, eleven bowstrings of Arjuna's, not knowing that Arjuna had one hundred strings to his bow; urged by Kṛṣṇa to strike Karna with "superior weapons," Arjuna then consecrated another celestial weapon with mantras, uniting the Raudra weapon with it. At that time the earth swallowed up one of Karna's wheels. Quickly alighting, Karna seized his sunken wheel with his two arms and endeavoured to lift it up; the earth rose up to the height of four fingers breadth, with her seven islands, etc.; Karna shed tears from wrath and asked Arjuna to wait for a moment till he had lifted his sunken wheel (VIII, 90). Kṛṣṇa taunted Karna for appealing to virtue and the rules of fair fight by reminding him of all the wrongs done to the Pāṇḍavas by himself and Duryodhana acting according to his counsels (ac'). Karna dropped his head in shame and gave no answer, and continued to fight. Kṛṣṇa urged Arjuna to pierce Karna with a celestial weapon; Arjuna, remembering the incidents alluded to by Kṛṣṇa, blazed up with fury; blazing flames of fire seemed to emanate from all the pores of his body, a sight that appeared exceedingly wonderful. Both Karna and Arjuna invoked the Brāhma weapon, and Karna once more made an effort to extricate his chariot. Arjuna shot an Āgni weapon, quenched by Karna with a Vārūṇa weapon, covering all the points of the compass with darkness, which Arjuna dispelled with the Vāyavya weapon. Pierced by a shaft of Karna's, while the earth trembled, etc., Arjuna began to reel, the Gāṇḍīva dropped from his hand, etc. At the interval Karna fruitlessly endeavoured to extricate his chariot. Recovering his senses, Arjuna took up an añjalika weapon. Urged by Kṛṣṇa to cut off the head of Karna, Arjuna cut off his standard, and then, with an añjalika weapon (the R. loudly crying out "peace be to the universe"), struck off Karna's head before Karna could mount his chariot. A light issued from Karna's body and entered the Sun. The Pāṇḍavas rejoiced (ac') (VIII, 91). Duryodhana, etc., grieved; Bhīma, uttering loud roars, frightened the Kauravas, etc. (ap'). Chalya informed Duryodhana of Karna's death (ay'). Duryodhana became almost deprived of his senses (VIII, 92). Requested by Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Sanjaya related the state of the Kaurava army after Karna's fall (ac'). Duryodhana resolved to make a final stand (ac'). Bhīmasena and Dhṛṣṭadyumna (+ four kinds of forces) & Duryodhana (+ 25,000 warriors on foot, who were slain); Arjuna & the chariot force of the Kauravas; Nakula, etc. (ac'), & Çakuni; the Kurus fled away; Cekitāna, etc. (ap'), blew their conches. Duryodhana challenged all the Pāṇḍavas and fought with them with great valour; he rallied the remnants of his troops and exhorted them to fight (ac'); they fled away heedless of his words (VIII, 93). Chalya described to Duryodhana the carnage on the field (ay'), and urged the withdrawal of the troops to their nightly quarters.

Having repeatedly comforted Duryodhana, they retired headed by Açvatthāman. Karna did not lose his splendour. D., R., etc., retired. The portents that were seen at Karna's fall. Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa blew their conches, at which the Kauravas left the field, deserting Çalya and Duryodhana. D., G., men, Cā., M.-r., Y., and M.-U. congratulated Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna (VIII, 94). Enumeration of the Kauravas retiring from the field (av'). Urged by Kṛṣṇa (aç'), who told Dhṛṣṭadyumna, etc. (aç'), to stand there with care, Arjuna presented himself to Yudhishtira, who, rising from his bed, greeted Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa; Kṛṣṇa congratulated Yudhishtira (aç'), who ascribed his success to Kṛṣṇa's influence (av'). Yudhishtira, with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, came back to the field to have a look at Karna's body. The kings, filled with joy, approached Yudhishtira and gladdened him greatly; so Nakula, etc. (βa'). Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī swooned away and were comforted by Vidura, Saṅjaya, and the Kuru ladies. [Khaḍgotpattikathana(m)] (the narrative of the origin of the sword). § 656 (cf. Āpaddh.): Naḥula (b) questioned Bhishma as to which (the sword or the bow) is really the foremost of weapons, and how the sword was first created and for what purpose, and who was the first instructor in the use of that weapon. Bhishma related that in ancient times the universe was one vast expanse of water, enveloped in darkness, etc. There Pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmān) took his birth, he then created wind, fire, etc., and then assuming a visible form he begot Marici, etc. (α) [and Pracetā; the last begot] Dakṣha (c). When Sarvalokapitāmaha (i.e. Brahmān) had called into existence all creatures he promulgated the eternal religion laid down in the Vedas. That religion was accepted by the gods with their preceptors and priests, and by Ā., V., R., S., M., A., Bhṛgu, Atri, Angiras, Si., the Kācyapas, Vasishtha, etc. (β); all of them lived in obedience to Brahmān. But the foremost of the Dānavas, Hiranyakaśipu, etc. (γ), and many other Dāityas and Dānavas, filled with wrath and covetousness, took delight in all kinds of wicked acts, etc., wielding only the rod of chastisement; those foremost of Asuras forsook every kindly intercourse with other creatures. Then Brahmān with the Brahmarshis proceeded to a delightful summit of Himavat, and after 1,000 years he arranged a sacrifice. From the sacrificial fire arose Asi ("the sword") (d), which Brahmān gave to Rudra (i.e. Śiva) in order to enable him to put down irreligion. Rudra (description) with the sword destroyed and dispersed the Asuras (Dānavas); some of them penetrated into the bowels of the earth, others got under the cover of the mountains, some went upwards, others entered the depths of the sea. Rudra then gave the sword to Vishṇu, Vishṇu to Marici, Marici to the maharshis, the maharshis to Vāsava (i.e. Indra), Mahendra (i.e. Indra) to the lokapālas, the lokapālas to Manu (e) the son of Sūrya. He gave it to his son Kāshapa. Thence it passed successively to Ishvāku, etc. (δ), from Droṇa to Kṛpa, from Kṛpa to theo (Nakula) and thy brothers. Kṛtikāḥ is the nakṣatra of the sword, Agni its deity, Rohini its gotra, Rudra its high preceptor. Its eight mysterious names are Asi, etc. (ε). Of all weapons the sword is the foremost; the Purāṇas truly declare that it was first wielded by Maheśvara (i.e. Śiva). Prithu (Vaiṣṇava) (f) created the first bow. Persons skilled in weapons should always worship the sword. Blessing to the reader (XII, 166).

Khāṇḍavadāha ("the burning of the Khāṇḍava forest"): § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 316 (°ākhyam parva, i.e. Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan).

[Khāṇḍavadahanaparvan(°va)], the 19th of the minor parvas, in C., including also Mayadarçanaparvan, in all I, 222–34 (cf. Khāṇḍavadāha). § 254: At the instance of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Bhishma the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha began to bring other kings under their sway. All the subjects lived happily. Once, in the summer, Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa sported on the banks of the Yamunā with Draupadī and Subhadṛā, etc. They were then approached by a brahman, whose complexion was like molten gold (I, 222). It was Agni. He asked them to help him to consume the forest of Khāṇḍava and the creatures therein; for Indra always prevented him from consuming it, because he was a friend of the Nāga Takshaka, who dwelt there with his followers and family.—§§ 255–6, a (Agniparābhava, q.v.): the antecedents of the Khāṇḍavad. (I, 223, 224).—§ 256, b: Arjuna said that he wanted a stronger bow and inexhaustible arrows, and a resplendent chariot to ride in, and that Kṛṣṇa needed a weapon with which he could slay Nāgas and Piçācas (I, 224).—§ 257: Then Agni thought of Varuṇa (δ), who presented Arjuna with: (1) the Gāṇḍīva bow (c); (2) two inexhaustible quivers; (3) a chariot yoked with horses. Then Agni gave to Kṛṣṇa: (1) a discus (Sudarśana) (d). Varuṇa, after this, gave to Kṛṣṇa: (2) the mace Kaumodakī (e). They were then ready to fight, and Agni began to consume the forest (I, 225).—§ 258: Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa prevented the creatures from escaping. Even the gods became afraid and applied to Indra. Indra poured down showers of rain, that were at first dried up in the sky by the heat of the fire (I, 226). When more rain was poured down, Arjuna dispelled it with a shower of his weapons. Takshaka was not present, having gone to Kurukshetra. But his son Aśvasena was there; his mother, a she-snake, attempted to swallow him, but had her head cut off by Arjuna; Indra, raising a violent wind, for a moment deprived Arjuna of his consciousness, during which time Aśvasena effected his escape, being cursed by Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna, and Agni ("never shalt thou be famous"). Indra assailed Arjuna with clouds, which were dispersed by the Vāyavya weapon, and with a shower of stones, and with a peak from the Mandara, but in vain. Garutmat (Garuḍa) and other birds, and Nāgas, who also assailed Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, were vanquished; and As., G., Y., Rā., and Nāgas were defeated by Arjuna, as were the Dai. and Dā. by Kṛṣṇa with his discus. They were also attacked by Yama with his death-dealing mace, Kubera with his spiked club, Varuṇa with his noose and beautiful missile, Skanda with his long lance, the Aśvins with resplendent plants, Dhātṛ with his bow, Jaya with a thick club, Tvāṣṭṛ with a huge mountain, Sūrya with a bright cakti, Mṛtyu with a battle-axe, Aryaman with a bludgeon furnished with sharp spikes, Mitra with a discus sharp as a razor, Pūshan, Bhaga, Savitr, R., V., M., V.-D., and S. (I, 227). With his discus Kṛṣṇa slaughtered Pç., N., Rā., Dā., As., etc. The gods retired from the scene. Indra became filled with joy and applauded Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. An incorporeal voice addressed him, saying that Takshaka was in Kurukshetra, and that Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, being the old ṛshis and gods Nara and Nārāyaṇa, were invincible, and that the destruction of the forest of Khāṇḍava had been ordained by fate. Then also Indra went back to heaven. The Vidyādhara, etc., dwelling in that forest, all became frightened. Agni, drinking the nectar-like stream of animal fat, became filled with joy. When the Asura Maya, the brother of Namuci, was about to be slain by Kṛṣṇa and burnt by Agni, Arjuna rescued him. Agni burnt the forest for fifteen days, sparing only six of its dwellers: Aśvasena, Maya, and four cārṅgakas (a sort of birds, Nil.) (I, 228).—§ 259 (Cārṅgakopākhyāna, q.v.): I, 229, 1–234, 4, (8331–8464).—§ 260: When Agni had consumed fat, marrow, and flesh in abundance, and burnt the forest for fifteen days, he became gratified and extinguished himself. Indra, with M., appeared before Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna, and granted them a boon. Arjuna asked him to give him all his weapons (both the Āgneya and the Vāyavya), and Indra promised to give them when Mahādeva had been pleased with him. To Kṛṣṇa he granted that his friendship with Arjuna should be eternal. Then he ascended to heaven with the celestials. Arjuna, Vāsudeva, and the Dānava Maya, having wandered a little, sat down on the bank of a river (I, 234).

[Kicakavadhaparvan] ("the slaughter of the Kīcakas"), the 54th of the minor parvans of Mhbhr. § 551: The Pāṇḍavas thus passed ten months in Matsya's city. As the year was about to expire, Kīcaka, the senāputi and brother-in-law of Virāṭa, became enamoured of Kṛṣṇā, who rebuked him and warned him of the Gandharvas, her husbands (IV, 14). Then he caused Sudeshṇū (Kaikēyī) to send Kṛṣṇā to him to fetch wine. Kṛṣṇā adored the Sun, who commanded a Rākshasa to protect her invisibly (IV, 15). As Kīcaka seized her, she dashed him to the ground and rushed to Yudhishtira, followed by Kīcaka, who brought her down and seized her by the hair, but the Rākshasa gave him a push, so that he fell down senseless. Yudhishtira, apprehensive of discovery, commanded Bhīmasena to forbear. Kṛṣṇā rebuked Virāṭa and was praised by the courtiers, but sent back to Sudeshṇā by Yudhishtira: "the Gandharvas will surely dispel thy woe." Sudeshṇā said: "I shall cause Kīcaka to be slain, if thou wishest it." Kṛṣṇā answered: "Even others will slay him" (IV, 16). Kṛṣṇā rose up at night and proceeded to Bhīmasena (IV, 17), and complained of their plight and especially that of Sahadeva (b) (IV, 18-21). Bhīmasena exhorted her to endure a little longer, reminding her of Sukanyā, Indrasenā (c), Sitā, Lopāmudrā, and Sāvitrī (IV, 21), and said: "To-morrow evening you should manage to have a meeting with Kīcaka in the dancing hall, but so that others may not spy thee." Kīcaka came to the rendezvous and was slain by Bhīmasena, and Kṛṣṇā said to the keepers of the dancing-hall: "Kīcaka has been slain by my Gandharva husbands" (IV, 22). Kīcaka's relatives obtained permission from Virāṭa to cremate Kṛṣṇā with him, and carried her towards the burning-place. She cried "Jaya", etc. (a). Bhīmasena hearing it, came and slew 105 of them with a tree (IV, 23). Virāṭa got afraid and caused Sudeshṇā to ask Kṛṣṇā to leave the country, but she obtained permission to remain for thirteen days (IV, 24).

[Kīṭopākhyāna] ("the episode relating to the worm"). § 762b (Ānuṣāsanik.). Bhīshma said: In days of old, when the emancipated (Brahmābhūtaḥ) brahman Vyāsa roamed over the world, he saw a worm speedily moving on a chariot-road. Asked by Vyāsa, who was omniscient and knew the language of every animal, the worm said that it was running away from a large cart, lest it should be killed; every creature, in whatever situation it may be placed, becomes attached to it; "in even this order of being I am happy, I think, and wish to live"; in his former life he was a cruel Çūdra, a usurer, etc., never dedicating food to D. and P., etc. (description); he now was filled with repentance and grief; he had, however, worshipped his old mother, and once showed hospitality to a brahman; in consequence thereof the memory had not forsaken him, and he thought he should once more regain happiness (XIII, 117). Vyāsa said: "It is the consequence of a meritorious act of mine that thou art not stupefied; in consequence of my penances I am able to rescue a being of demerit by the simply granting him sight of my person; there is no stronger power than that of penances. Thou mayest again attain to righteousness and merit; the state of a worm is really fraught with great misery. The superior brahman worships the Sun and the Moon uttering mantras; when thou hast attained to that state, I shall impart to thee Brāhmaṇ." The worm remained and was killed by the cart. He was reborn in diverse orders of being, such as a porcupine, Iguana, boar, deer, bird, Cāṇḍāla, Çūdra, and Vaiçya. Born at last as a Kshatriya (with Kāmboja steeds, Sūtas and Māgadhas, etc.; description) through the grace of Vyāsa, he came and worshipped him. Vyāsa said that the sin of his former life had yet not been destroyed; he should become a brahman by giving up his life on the field of battle for the sake of cows or brahmins; performing many sacrifices he should attain to heaven, and after emancipation (Brahma-bhūtaḥ) he should enjoy eternal happiness. The ascending order of transmigrating is: († v. 5774) animal > Çūdra > Vaiçya > Kshatriya > Brahman > Svarga (XIII, 118). He betook himself to severe austerities; Vyāsa went to him and said that the penances of the Kshatriyas consist in the protection of all creatures; thereby he should attain to the state of a brahman. Then he protected his subjects righteously, and after death became a brahman. Vyāsa came and told him not to fear death, but only the loss of righteousness. He caused the earth to be marked with 100 sacrificial stakes, and then obtained a residence in the region of Brahmān himself, and obtained the eternal Brāhmaṇ by his own acts, according to the words of Vyāsa. Also the Kshatriyas, who have been slain [on the field of Kurukshetra], have attained to a meritorious end (galim punyām); therefore, do not mourn on their account" (XIII, 119).

among men; (10) having been Nārāyaṇa, he became Hari, Brahmān, Sūrya, Dharma, Dhātṛ, Yama, Anala, Vāyu, Vaiṣṇava, Rudra, Kāla, the firmament (kham), the earth, and the ten directions, etc.; (11) in the forest of Caitraratha he gratified the highest god with sacrifices and at each sacrifice he offered gold by hundreds of thousands; (12) becoming Viṣṇu, the son of Aditi, and the younger brother of Indra, he, even while a child, pervaded, in three steps, the heaven, the firmament, and the earth, and, standing in the abode of the Sun (Adityasādan, B. however has Adityasādan, i.e. in the chariot of the Sun), outshone him by his splendour; (13) in thousands of incarnations (prādurbhāvaṣu) he slew sinful Asuras by hundreds; (14) he cut the bonds of Muru (v. BR. s.v. Maurava), killed Nisanda and Naraka, and again rendered safe the road of Prāgyotisha; (15) he slew Ahirī at Jarāthī (a river, BK.; a city, Nil.), and also Krāthā, Çiṣupāla with his adherents, Jarāśandha, Çaiḍya, and Çatadhanvan; (16) on his chariot, roaring like clouds, he conquered his queen, the daughter of the Bhoja king (Bhojyam) by defeating in battle Rukmin; (17) he slew Indradymna and the Yavana Kaçerumat; (18) he slew Çūla, the lord of Saubha, and destroyed Saubha; (19) at Irāvati he slew Bhoja, who was equal to Kārtavīrya in battle; (20) he slew Gopati and Talaketu; (21) he had appropriated to himself the wealthy (bhogavatīm) and holy Dvārakā, beloved by the ṛṣhis (so PCR., who has read ṛṣikāntām instead of ṛṣikāntām) and will again submerge it within the ocean; (22) at the end of the yuga he had contracted all beings and withdrawn the whole universe into his own self; (23) in the beginning of the yuga Brahmān sprang from the lotus of his navel; (24) when the Dānavas Madhu and Kaiṣabha were bent upon slaying Brahmān, there sprang from his (i.e. K.'s) forehead Çambhu (i.e. Çiva), the holder of the trident (Çūlapāṇiḥ) with three eyes (Trilocaṇaḥ); thus these two foremost deities (i.e. Brahmān and Çiva) had sprung from his body to do his work; this Nārada had told; (25) the deeds he performed when a boy, assisted by Baladeva, never had been done nor would be done by others; (26) he dwelt on Kailāsa together with brahmana.—K. said to Arjuna: "Thou art mine and I am thine, those who are mine are also thine, he who hates thee hates me, and he who follows thee follows me; thou art Nara and I am Hari Nārāyaṇa; we are the ṛṣhis Nara and Nārāyaṇa born in the world [of men] in time (i.e. for a special purpose, PCR.); thou art the same as I and I am the same as thou; there is no difference between us."—Draupadī said: "(1) They say that in the creation of beings thou art the one Prajāpati; (2) Asita Devala called thee the creator of all worlds; (3) Jāmadagnya (so B.) said that thou art Viṣṇu, the sacrifice, the sacrificer, and he to whom the sacrifice is performed; (4) the ṛṣhis call thee Forgiveness and Truth; (5) Kaçyapa said that thou art sacrifice sprung from truth; (6) Nārada called thee the lord of the lords of the Sādhyas, gods and ṛṣhis, the creator and the lord of all things; thou sportest with the hosts of the gods, including Brahmān, Çaṅkara, and Çakra, etc., even as a child with his toys; the firmament is covered by thy head and the earth by thy feet, these worlds are thy womb, thou art the eternal Puruṣa; thou art the best of the ṛṣhis, sanctified with Vedic lore, etc. . . . the refuge of the rājareṣhis . . . the supreme Lord of all creatures celestial and human": III, 12, 471, 472, 474, 475, 477, 482, 485, 487, 501.—§ 317 (Arjunābhigamanap.): III, 12, 503, 521, 525, 534 (father of Pradyumna), 538, 542, 544, 575, 577,

Having smashed the Gāndhāras and vanquished the sons of Nagunjit he forcibly liberated king Sudarçana from confinement. He slew the Pāṇḍya king by striking his breast (kapāṭena (?), v. the note of PCR., p. 174) and mowed down the Kalingas in battle. The city of Vārāṇasī was burned by K. and remained for many years without a king. Ekalarṇya, the king of the Nishādas, who could not be defeated by others, always used to challenge K. to battle, but slain by him he lay dead like the Asura Jambha violently thrashed on a hillock. Having Baladeva for his second he slew Ugrasena's wicked son (i.e. Kaṁsa) seated in court in the midst of the Vṛṣṇis and the Andhakas, and then gave the kingdom to Ugrasena. He fought with Çālva, and at the gate of Saubha he with his hands caught the fierce çataghni. The Asuras had a city named Pragjyotiṣa, which was formidable, inaccessible, etc. It was there that Naraka Bhauma kept the ear-rings of Aditi, which he had stolen; the gods with Çakra (i.e. Indra) at their head were incapable of conquering him, and therefore employed K. to destroy these Asuras. At the city of Nirmocana K. slew 6,000 Asuras, and having cut their paçāḥ kahurāntāḥ, he slew Muru and crowds of Rākṣasas (ogharakṣah, which by Nil. is taken as a Rākṣasa named Ogha), and then he entered that city. It was there that an encounter took place between Naraka and Vishṇu (i.e. Kṛṣṇa); slain by K., Naraka lay lifeless like a karnikāra-tree uprooted by the wind. When he had slain Naraka and Muru and recovered the ear-rings, K. came back and the gods granted him boons: "fatigue will never be thing in fight; neither the firmament nor the waters shall stop thy course, nor shall weapons penetrate thy body": V, 48, †1884, †1889, †1891 (Vishṇoh), †1892, †1894.—§ 561 (do.): V, 48, [†1895 (Vishṇum)], †1896 (friend of the Pāṇḍavas).—§ 561d (Nara-Nārāyaṇau): V, 49, 1936 (K. is identical with Nārāyaṇa, Arjuna with Nara).—§ 561 (Yānasandhip.): V, [49, 1939 (Çaṅkhacakraḡadāhastam . . . Keçavam)]; 50, 1992 (°dviṭyo vikramya tuṣṭiyartham Jāṭavedasaḥ, sc. [Kṛtaghnopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode about an ungrateful person"). § 658b (Āpaddh.): Bhīṣma related: Gauṣṇma, a brahman, belonging to the middle country, devoid of Vedic learning, entered a village desirous of obtaining charity. In that village lived a robber (dasyu), possessed of great wealth, devoted to the brahmins, etc. He gave to Gautama a piece of new cloth, a widowed (bhartrā virahitā) young woman, and a house. Gautama lived happily in that village of aborigines (śabarālaya) for many years, helping the relatives of his wife, the female slave (dāst). He began to practise archery, and went into the woods and killed wild cranes (cakrāṅgān), etc., in abundance, and became like one of the robbers. One day a brahman, devoted to the study of the Vedas, etc., and who did never accept any food if given by a Čādra, came to the house of his ancient friend Gautama. Seeing Gautama, who resembled a cannibal, he exhorted him to abandon his sinful mode of life. Gautama, repenting, agreed to leave this village next morning with his guest, who passed the night there, refraining touching anything (though hungry) (XII, 168). Next morning, when the guest had left the house, Gautama proceeded towards the sea, having met with a caravan of merchants. The caravan was assailed by an infuriated elephant, but Gautama managed to escape, and fled towards the north, not knowing whither he proceeded, wandering alone in the forest like a kimpuruṣa. At last he reached a delightful forest, resembling the very woods of Nandana, and inhabited by Y. and K., adorned with Čalas, etc., with Bhāruṇḍas (having faces resembling those of human beings), Bhalingas, etc. Under a delightful banyan-tree (description) he fell asleep; when the sun had set, the king of cranes, Nāḍṭjaṅgha or Rājadharmān, Kaśyapa's son, the child of a celestial maiden (dovakanyāsutah), one of the daughters of Dakṣa (v. 6343), and possessed of great wisdom and a friend of Brahmān, came home from Brahmaloka. Exhausted with hunger and thirst, Gautama thought of slaying him. Nāḍṭjaṅgha welcomed Gautama, and asked him to stay with him till the next morning (XII, 169). He, who equalled Yama himself in his knowledge of duties, made for him a bed of the čala flowers, and offered him large fishes from the Bhāgrathī, etc. Learning that he was desirous of going to the sea in order to earn wealth, he, quoting Brhaspati as to the fourfold means of earning wealth, directed him in the morning to his friend, the chief of the Rākṣasas, Virāpākṣa, about 3 yojanas away. Gautama reached the city of Moruvraja (description), and was welcomed by Virāpākṣa (XII, 170). Though not satisfied with Gautama's antecedents, Virāpākṣa, because Gautama was a brahman, and for the sake of Rājadharmān, entertained him with the 1,000 brahmins that were to be entertained in his house on the day of full moon of the Kārttika month (description). Some amongst them were selected to represent the V.-D., P., and the deities of fire. This he did every year on the Āshāḍhi and Māghī, and especially on the Kārttikī, after the expiry of the autumn, giving away gold, jewels, etc.; on this one day there was no fear of Rā. Gautama came away with much wealth, and returned to Rājadharmān, who welcomed him. Having no food to live on by the way, he thought of slaying Rājadharmān (XII, 171). This he did; having plucked off the feathers and the down, he roasted the flesh, and taking it up together with the gold he had brought, he quickly fled from the spot. The next day Virāpākṣa became anxious because he had not for two mornings and two nights seen Rājadharmān, who when returning from Brahmaloka every morning never went home without paying him a visit; he suspected that Gautama had slain him, and sent his son with other Rā. to inquire after him. Gautama was caught and brought to Moruvraja; as the Rā. refused to eat the flesh of that great sinner, he was hacked into pieces, which were given away to the robbers. But the very robbers, though cannibals, refused to eat the flesh of that vile man (XII, 172). Virāpākṣa caused a funeral pyre, etc., to be made for Rājadharmān. At that time the goddess Surabhi, the daughter of Dakṣa, appeared in the sky above the pyre; from her mouth froth mixed with milk fell upon the funeral pyre, and Rājadharmān became revived. Indra came and related that once Rājadharmān had absented himself from Brahmaloka and was cursed by Brahmān, who said that he should not die soon; "therefore he has come back to life." Asked by Rājadharmān on behalf of his "dear friend Gautama", Indra sprinkled amṛta over Gautama, and restored him to life. Rājadharmān embraced him with great joy, dismissed him with his wealth, and returned home. At the due hour he repaired to Brahmaloka and was honoured by Brahmān. Gautama begot many sinful children upon his Čādra wife. According to a heavy curse denounced upon him by the gods, he afterwards had to sink into a terrible hell for many years. "All this was recited to me formerly by Nārada."

Kurukshetrakathana(m) ("relation of Kurukshetra") § 615kk (Baladevat.): The R. said to Bala-Rāma: This Samantapañcaka is said to be the eternal northern altar of Prajāpati; there, in days of yore, the gods performed a great sacrifice. The R.-r. Kuru had cultivated this field for many years; hence it came to be called Kurukshetra ("the field of Kuru"). Requested by Bala-Rāma, the R. related: In days of yore Kuru was engaged in perseveringly tilling this field; requested by Indra, he said: "Those that will die upon this plain, shall proceed to regions of bliss after being cleansed of their sins." Çakra, ridiculing this, went back to heaven. This happened repeatedly. Indra summoned the gods, who asked him to stop Kuru by granting him a boon; "if men, by only dying there, were to come to heaven, without having performed sacrifices to us, our very existence would be endangered." Indra then came, and they agreed that Kuru should not toil any more; but those that would die there, having abstained from food, with all their senses awake, and those that would perish there in battle, should go straight to heaven. It was sanctioned by all the principal gods, headed by Brahmān, that on earth there should be no more sacred spot than this; those men that performed austere penances here would all, after laying down their bodies, go to Brahmān's abode; those who gave away their wealth here would soon have their wealth doubled; those who would reside constantly here would never have to behold the region of Yama; those kings that would perform great sacrifices here would reside as long in heaven as earth would last. Indra had himself composed a verse here and sang it: "The very dust of Kurukshetra . . . shall cleanse persons of wicked acts and carry them to heaven." The principal gods, brahmanas, kings as Nrga, etc., having performed costly sacrifices here, have, after abandoning their bodies, proceeded to heaven. The space between Tarantuka and Arantuka and the lakes of Rāma (Rāmahrādānam) and Macakruka (C. °kra°), this Kurukshetra-Samantapañcaka is called the northern altar of Prajāpati. All that Çakra said was approved by Brahmān, Vishṇu, and Maheshvara (IX, 53).

[Lokapālasabhākhyānaparvan] ("the section containing the description of the palaces of the Lokapālas," the 21st of the minor parvas of the Mahābhārata). (Cf. Lokapālasabhākhyāna.)—§ 265: While the Pāṇḍavas were sitting in that palace, with the great Gandharvas, there came unto them the devarshi Nārada (his accomplishments are enumerated at great length), having wandered over the different worlds, accompanied by the rshis Pūrijāta, Rāivata, Sumukta, and Saumya. Nārada informed Yudhiṣṭhira about religion, pleasure, and profit, in the form of questions about his conduct. By following his advice Yudhiṣṭhira conquered the whole earth (II, 5). Yudhiṣṭhira answered that he observed all those rules. Then he asked Nārada if he had ever seen a palace like his. Nārada (Brahmarakṣiḥ, v. 281) replied that no palace among men was like his, but that he would describe unto him the palaces of Pitṛāja (i.e. Yama), Varuṇa, Indra, the dweller on Kailāsa (i.e. Kubera), and Brahmān, always worshipped by gods, Pitṛs and Sādhyas, etc. (II, 6).—§ 266: Çakrasabhāvarāna (q.v.).—§ 267: Yamasabhāvarāna (q.v.).—§ 268: Varuṇasabhāvarāna (q.v.).—§ 269: Vaiçṛavānasabhāvarāna (q.v.).—§ 270: Brahmasabhāvarāna (q.v.).—§ 271: Yudhiṣṭhira said: It appears that almost all the monarchs are in the sabhā of Yama—the Nagas, Daiṭyas, rivers, and oceans in that of Varuṇa—the Yakṣas, Guhyaks, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Apsarasas, and Çiva in that of Kubera—the great rshis, and gods, and çāstras in that of Pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmān); and in that of Çakra (i.e. Indra) gods, Gandharvas and various rshis, but only one king, the rājarshi Hariçandra (b); this is explained by Nārada. Pāṇḍu, beholding the good fortune of Hariçandra, had asked Nārada to tell Yudhiṣṭhira to subjugate the whole earth and then perform a rājasūya. Thereby also Pāṇḍu and his ancestors would go to the region of Indra. Brahmarakṣasas, that destroy the sacrifices, always look for opportunities of obstructing it. Then Nārada went away to the city of the Dācārhas, accompanied by the rshis with whom he had come (II, 12).

[Mahābhīṣopākhyāna(m)] ("episode relating to king Mahābhīṣa"). § 161 (Sambhavap): The rājaraṣi Mahābhīṣa, of the race of Iksvāku, had gratified Indra by 1,000 horse sacrifices and 100 rajasūyas and attained to Svarga. One day, when the gods and rājaraṣis were worshipping Brahmān, the Wind loosened the garments of Gaṅgā. The gods bent down their heads, but Mahābhīṣa rudely stared at her, and for this Brahmān cursed him, saying that he should be reborn on earth, [as should also Gaṅgā, but when his wrath should be provoked by her he should again attain to heaven] (the words in brackets are only to be found in B.). He then wished to be born as a son of Pratīpa. The Vasus had been cursed by the ṛṣi Vasiṣṭha, whom they had crossed when he was engaged in his twilight adorations, that they should be born among men. They chose to be born of Gaṅgā as sons to Čāntanu, who should be borne to Pratīpa, and Gaṅgā promised that she would throw them into the water as soon as they were born, except one, upon whom they would each contribute one-eighth of their energies, but who should be childless (I, 96). (For continuation v. Čāntanūpākhyāna.)

[Mahāprasthānikaparvan] ("the section relating to the great journey to the other world," the 17th of the great and the 99th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Mahāprasthānika(m) parva(n)).—§ 794: Janamejaya said: Having heard of the battle with iron clubs between the Vṛshnis and Andhakas, and of Kṛṣṇa's ascension to heaven, what did the Pāṇḍavas do? Vaiṣampāyana said: Having heard the particulars of the great slaughter of the Vṛshnis, Yudhiṣṭhira set his heart on leaving the world, saying to his brothers that it is Time that ripens every creature, of which they approved. He made the kingdom over to Yuyutsu and installed Parikṣit as king in Hastinapura, while Vajra ruled in Indraprastha. Then he offered oblations of water to Kṛṣṇa, Rāma, and Vasudeva, etc., and grādhas to his deceased kinsmen, and fed Vyāsa, Nārada, Mārkaṇḍeya, and Yājñavalkya, and gave jewels, etc. (specification) to brahmins in honour of Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa was installed as the preceptor of Parikṣit. Then he summoned his subjects and informed them of his intentions; they tried in vain to dissuade him. He and his brothers and Draupadī removed their ornaments and wore barks of trees; then they threw their sacred fires into the water. Then they set out on their journey: the five Pāṇḍavas, Draupadī, and a dog. Kṛṣṇa, etc., stood around Yuyutsu; Uśatī entered the waters of Gaṅgā; Citrāṅgada set out for Manipūra; the grandmothers of Parikṣit surrounded him. Yudhiṣṭhira, etc., set out with their faces turned towards the east, devoting themselves to yoga, resolved to observe the religion of renunciation; Yudhiṣṭhira first, then the other Pāṇḍavas in the order of their birth, behind them all Draupadī; a dog followed them. They reached the sea of red water. Agni came, and mentioning the Khāṇḍava forest, etc. (a), he caused Arjuna to throw the Gāṇḍīva and his inexhaustible quivers into the water to be given back to Varuṇa. Then Agni disappeared. They now proceeded towards the south; then, by the northern coast of the salt sea, to the south-west; then towards the west, where they saw Dvārakā covered by the ocean; then to the north, observant of yoga, desirous of making a round of the whole earth (XVII, 1). They crossed Himavat, and beheld a vast desert of sand, and then Meru. Kṛṣṇa dropped down; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhiṣṭhira said that this was the consequence of her partiality for Arjuna. Then Sahadeva fell down; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhiṣṭhira said it was because he never thought anybody his equal in wisdom. They went on. Nakula fell; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhiṣṭhira said it was because he thought that nobody equalled him in beauty, though his righteousness was without blemish. Arjuna fell down; asked by Bhīmasena, Yudhiṣṭhira said that it was because Arjuna had said that he would consume all the foes in a single day, but did not accomplish it. Bhīmasena fell down; Yudhiṣṭhira told him it was because he was a great eater, and used to boast of his strength. Yudhiṣṭhira went on with the dog (XVII, 2). Indra came with a chariot, and asked Yudhiṣṭhira to ascend it for going to Heaven; Yudhiṣṭhira wanted to take Draupadī and his fallen brothers with him; Indra said they have already reached Heaven, where he will see them; Yudhiṣṭhira would have the dog to accompany him; † as Indra said there is no place in Heaven for persons with dogs, as the Krodhavaṇas take away all the merits of such persons, Yudhiṣṭhira refused to ascend the chariot. Then [the dog, transformed into] Dharma, said to Yudhiṣṭhira (†vv. 80-9) that he had formerly tested him in the Dvāitavana, where he had chosen the revival of Nakula, disregarding Bhīmasena and Arjuna, for doing good to his [step]mother; "there is no one in Heaven that is equal to thee." Then Dharma, Indra, M., A., D., D.-r., causing Yudhiṣṭhira to ascend the chariot, proceeded to Heaven on their respective chariots. Nārada said that Yudhiṣṭhira was superior to all the R.-r. there. Yudhiṣṭhira wished to proceed to where his brothers were; Indra, saying that his brothers had won regions of felicity, tried to persuade him to stay, beholding D.-r. and Si.; Yudhiṣṭhira wished to be united with his brothers and Draupadī (XVII, 3).

Maitreya = Sūrya: III, 157.

Maitreya-bhikṣhā ("the alms of Maitreya"). § 763b (Ānuśāsanik.): Bhīshma said: Once Vyāsa, while wandering in disguise, waited at Vārāṇasī upon Maitreya in the house of a loose woman (avairiṇikū; so BR.; quite otherwise Nil. and PCR.), and was fed by him with excellent food. As he smiled, Maitreya said that he did not see much difference between one that behaved as an ordinary person [such as Vyāsa] [and himself], [or generally] between one who is unemancipated and one who is emancipated, especially when [the latter, such as Maitreya] was distinguished by birth (prīhagācaratas tāta prīhagātmāsukhātmanoh | alpāntaram aham manye, viśiṣṭam api cānvayāt; cf. Nil. and PCR.). Vyāsa said that he wondered that the Vedas should [seemingly] contain an untruth; for even a small gift (as, for instance, a little water given to a thirsty man) produces great results, and Maitreya had, by feeding Vyāsa, conquered many high regions of felicity, as one does [according to the Vedas, only] by great sacrifices. Gift is more auspicious than all sacred acts (XIII, 120). Maitreya, approving of the words of Vyāsa, praised the brahmins as the root of righteousness: "if the brahman be gratified, D. and P. also are gratified," referring to R. (XIII, 121). Vyāsa, saying that even the most atrocious sins are washed off by (gifts and) penances, recommended to him the duties of householders (XIII, 123).

[Maitreya-śāpa(h)] ("the curse of Maitreya"). § 315 (Āraṇyak.). Vyāsa said that the śāhi Maitreya would admonish Duryodhana. Maitreya came, having on a tīrthayātra arrived at Kurujāṅgala, and having visited Yudhishtira in the Kāmyaka wood. As Maitreya advised Duryodhana to make peace with the Pāṇḍavas now that Bhīma had slain Kṛmīra, etc., Duryodhana gave him a slight by slapping his thigh and scratching the ground with his foot. Therefore Maitreya cursed him, saying that Bhīma should smash that thigh of his with his mace; this curse, however, should not take effect if he made peace with the Pāṇḍavas. Dhṛtarāṣṭra wished to hear about the death of Kṛmīra, but Maitreya would not speak again to him, because his words were not regarded by Duryodhana; saying that Vidura would relate it to him, he went away. Duryodhana went out perturbed. (III, 10.)

[Māndhātṛupākhyāna(m)] (episode relating to Māndhātṛ) (cf. Māndhātṛ . . . upākhyānaṃ, I, 446).—§ 407 (Tīrthay.): Questioned by Yudhisṭhira, Lomaṣa said: King (rājareṣi, v. 10429) Yuvanāṣva Saudyumnī, of Iṣṭhākū's race, performed besides other sacrifices 1,000 horse-sacrifices. As he had no sons, he made over the duties of the state to his ministers, and retired to the woods. Having once observed a fast, he entered the hermitage of Bhṛgu, while the great ṛṣhis were asleep, and drank a jar of water, which the son of Bhṛgu (mahareṣiḥ), after having performed severe austerities, had destined to be drunk by Yuvanāṣva's queen in order that she should bear him a son, who by his bravery might send even Indra to the abode of Yama. A sacrifice was then performed for him; after 100 years a son pierced Yuvanāṣva's left side (nor did Yuvanāṣva die). Indra came, and put the boy's forefinger into his mouth, saying "me he shall suck" (mām ayaṃ dhāsyati, whence the boy was called Māndhātṛ). Thereby Māndhātṛ became very strong, and grew 13 cubits (kishṭan), and acquired the whole of the Vedas including the Dhanurveda by his thought alone, and on the same day he obtained the bow Ājagava and a number of shafts made of horn, and an impenetrable coat of mail. He was placed on the throne by Indra himself, and conquered the three worlds in a righteous way; the gems of their own accord came into his possession, and he performed a number of sacrifices with abundant gratuities, and sat at Indra's side. His sacrificial grounds (satyāḥ) were to be found all over the earth, and he is said to have given away to the Brahmins 10,000 padmas of kine. After twelve years' drought he caused rain to come down, paying no heed to Indra. He slew the Gandhāra king of the lunar dynasty. Here, in the midst of Kurukṣetra, is the spot where he sacrificed to the gods (III, 126).

Maṇkanaka¹ (III, 5079), v. Macakruka.
Maṇkanaka², a ṛshi. § 365 (of Tirthayātrāp.): At the tirtha Saptasārasvata the great ṛshi M. became perfect (siddhaḥ), so that when he had cut his hand with the pointed blade of a kuṣa grass, there flew from his wound vegetable juice, at which he began to dance, and the animate and inanimate creation also began to dance together with him. Then the gods, headed by Brahman and the ṛshis, asked Mahadeva (i.e. Īva) to prevent him from dancing. The god then in the presence of M. pressed his thumb with the tip of his own finger, and from the wound there came ashes, white as snow. Then M. became ashamed and adored Rudra, saying that he was the refuge of the world, including the gods and the Asuras, that he had created the three worlds, and swallows everything at the end of the yuga, that he cannot be fathomed by the gods themselves, that all the gods headed by Brahman are to be seen in him, etc. At his request Īva said to the Brahmarṣi that his asceticism (tapas) should through the grace of Īva increase a thousandfold, that he would dwell with him in the ārama, and that those who bathe in Saptasārasvata and worship Īva should be able to obtain everything here and hereafter, and go to the Sarasvata loka; then Mahadeva disappeared: III, 83, 6086.—§ 615 (Baladevatirthayātrā): IX, 37, 2185 (siddhaḥ . . . mahāmuniḥ, had performed austerities at Saptasārasvata); 38, 2186.—§ 615j (do.): M. had from his youth led the life of a brahma-cārin. Once, when performing his ablutions in the river Sarasvatī, he beheld a woman bathing in the river; at this sight his seed dropped and fell into the Sarasvatī; he took it up and placed it in his earthen pot; then it became divided into seven parts, whence were born seven ṛshis: Vyasa, etc. (8), who were the progenitors of the Maruts. [Manushyagrahakathana(m)] ("on the demons that possess mankind"). § 502 (cf. Skandop.). The six divorced wives of the ṛshis, together with Vinatā, obtained permission from Skanda to become his mothers. At the request of Indra the Kṛttikās (i.e. the six wives of the ṛshis) (together with Vinatā, see v. 14464 and Nīl.) are placed among the nakṣatras (and presided over by Agni) instead of Abhijit, the younger sister of Rohiṇi, who from jealousy had repaired to the woods. Brahmān ordered that time should be reckoned from Dhanishṭhā, while it had formerly been reckoned from Rohiṇi (so Nīl.). Then (these seven) mothers asked Skanda that they might become the mothers of the worlds instead of the old mothers (Brāhmī, Māheçvari, etc.; Nīl.) and devour the progeny of those old mothers, because they had slandered them before their husbands, and always dwell with Skanda. Skanda granted that until the age of 16 years they should have the power of afflicting the human kind, and he loosed from his body his Raudra nature, under the name of Skandāpasāra, that they might dwell with him. Enumeration of several grahas (the number 16 in v. 14490 is difficult to explain), among others (a) the male and female children of Skanda (the males are the husbands of the females); they are all named Skandagrahas; they are propitiated with offerings, ablutions, unguents, etc., and particularly by the worship of Skanda; and when they are propitiated they bestow good on men. Then are mentioned the grahas, that afflict men from the 16th to the 70th year; after the 70th year fever takes the place of the grahas. These evil spirits always avoid those who have subdued their senses, etc., and those who are devoted to Māheçvara (III, 230).

Mārjāra - mūshika - samvāda(ḥ) ("the discourse between a cat and a mouse"). § 646δ (Āpaddh.): There was a large banyan in the midst of a forest, with various kinds of birds, etc. A wise mouse, Palita, lived at the foot of that tree, having made a hole there with 100 outlets. On the branches lived a cat Lomaça. A Cāṇḍāla came and built a hut, setting his traps of leather strings every evening after sunset. One day he caught the cat. Palita began to eat the flesh in the trap, but beheld the mongoose Harit and the owl Candraka. He resolved upon saving the cat, though an enemy, in order to escape from them; having made peace with the cat, he crouched beneath it; the mongoose and owl left the spot; the mouse began to cut the strings slowly, notwithstanding the cat's impatience. At morning the Cāṇḍāla Parigṛha appeared (description), accompanied by a pack of dogs. Then the mouse quickly cut the remaining string; the cat got upon the banyan, Palita entered his hole. The hunter took up his net and left the spot. Palita would not conclude friendship with the cat, and entered another hole.

Mārkaṇḍeyasamāśyā ("the [Pāṇḍavas] enjoying the company of Mārkaṇḍeya"). § 10 (Parvasaṅg.): I, 2, 323 (parva, i.e. Mārkaṇḍeyasamāśyāp.).—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 466, 468 (purāṇam = do.).

[Mārkaṇḍeyasamāśyāparvan(°va)](“section relating to the [Pāṇḍavas] enjoying the company of Mārkaṇḍeya,” the 41st of the minor parvas of Mbhr.). (Cf. Mārkaṇḍeyasamāśyā.) § 451: When the Pāṇḍavas were dwelling at that very place (cf. v. 12547: osrañam marudhanvasu, “roaming about in deserts”), there set in the season of the rains (description). Then in the autumn (description) they spent the holiest night, that of the full moon in the month of Kārttika, on the Sarasvatī with the ascetics. As soon as the dark fortnight set in, they with their charioteers and cooks entered the Kāmyaka forest (III, 182).—§ 452: In the Kāmyaka wood many brahmins came to them, and one of them said that Kṛṣṇa and Mārkaṇḍeya would come to see them. Immediately Kṛṣṇa arrived with Satyabhāmā on his chariot that was yoked with Çaiḍya and Sugriva. He told Kṛṣṇa that her sons, though her father and brothers proffered them a kingdom and territories, found no joy in the house of Drupada, but that in the town of the Vṛkṣas they were directed by Subhadra and received instruction from Raukmiṣya even as Aniruddha, Abhimanyu, Sunitha, and Bhānu, and were instructed by the young Abhimanyu in the use of arms. Then he suggested to Yudhiṣṭhira with the Draçarhas, Kuturas, and Andhakas, to kill Duryodhana, etc. Yudhiṣṭhira said they would stand by their promise, and after the thirteen years take refuge in

Kṛṣṇa.—§ 458: While they were thus talking, the brahmarshi Mārkaṇḍeya (b) appeared. When they had taken their seats, the devarshi Nārada also came to visit them. Yudhiṣṭhira, mentioning the happiness of the impious Dhātaraśṭras, asked Mārkaṇḍeya about the results of men's acts. Mārkaṇḍeya, after having described the Kṛta age and the subsequent deterioration, answered the question (III, 183).—§§ 454-5: Brahmaṇamāhātmya - kathana (q.v.).—§ 456: Sarasvatī-Tūrkhyā-samvāda (q.v.).—§ 457: Vairasvatopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 458: Yudhiṣṭhira, saying that Mārkaṇḍeya alone worships Brahmān at the time of the great dissolution, when he sleeps in a lotus flower, and when he awakes to recreate the world, asked him to explain the causes of things. Mārkaṇḍeya said: Janārdana attired in yellow robes is the great creator of everything. After the dissolution, creation again comes to life. Kṛta yuga = 4,000 years + dawn 400 years + eve 400 years; Tretā yuga = 3,000 + 300 + 300; Dvāpara yuga = 2,000 + 200 + 200; Kali yuga = 1,000 + 100 + 100; altogether a cycle of yugas = 12,000 years. After the Kali yuga is over, the Kṛta yuga comes again. One thousand cycles constitute a day of Brahmān. Description of Kali yuga (b). Then comes a long drought, and seven suns drink up all water and reduce wood and grass to ashes. Then the Samvartaka fire with wind penetrates into Rasātala and terrifies the gods, Dānavas, and Yakṣas, and consumes this world with gods, Asuras, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Uragas, and Rākṣasas. And there rise in the sky deep masses of clouds flooding the entire surface of the earth and showering incessantly for twelve years. Then Svayambhū, dwelling in the lotus, drinks this terrible wind and goes to sleep.—§ 459: When all has become water, I (i.e. Mārkaṇḍeya) alone wander in affliction and become fatigued, and find no resting-place. Then I behold a vast banyan-tree, and on a couch attached to a bough of that tree a fair boy with yellow robes, with the mark of Śrīvatsa. He caused me to enter his body through the mouth, and then I beheld the whole earth with cities and kingdoms, Gāṅgā, Čatadvāra, etc. (enumeration) (a), gods, Sādhyas, Rudras, Adityas, etc. (enumeration) (β). At last I was suddenly projected through his open mouth by a gust of wind. Within that very moment I acquired a new sight and beheld myself emancipated (nirmuktaṃ). I wished to know his self. Then he spoke to me (III, 188): "The gods even do not know me truly. I am Nārāyaṇa (v. 12952: "in ancient times I called the waters nārā, and because the waters have ever been my ayana [home], therefore I have been called Nārāyaṇa"), the eternal and unchangeable source of all things, the Creator and Destroyer of all; I am Viṣṇu, Brahmān, Čakra, etc.; in the form of Čakṣa I support this earth, in the form of a boar I raised it when sunk in water; I am the Vaḍavavaktre fire; from my mouth, arms, thighs, and feet sprang brahmanas, kṣatriyas, vaiśyas, and śūdras; from me spring the Rg-, Sama-, Yajur-, and Atharva-vēda; I am the Samvartaka fire, the Samvartaka-wind, the Samvartaka sun, and the Samvartaka fire (!) (v. 12966 foll.); the stars are the pores of my skin, etc. When virtue and morality decrease, I create myself into new forms; in the Kṛta age I become white, etc. (see §§ 426, 427, 428, 429). When the end comes, I alone in the form of Kālā destroy the three worlds, etc. The grandsire of all creatures (Sarvalohapitāmaha) is half of my body. I am the bearer of the conch-shell, the discus, and the mace. For a period of 1,000 cycles of yugas I sleep, overwhelming all creatures in insensibility, and I stay here, in the form of a boy though I am old, until Brahmān wakes up; under the form of Brahmān I have repeatedly granted these boons. When Brahmān (Sarvalohapitāmaha) awakes, I will then alone create all creatures." Then he disappeared, and I (Mārkaṇḍeya) beheld this creation start into life. And that deity is Kṛṣṇa, thy relative. In consequence of the boon granted by him memory does not fail me, my life is long, and death is under my control (v. 13002). Then all bowed down unto Janārdana (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), who comforted them (III, 189).—§ 460: Yudhiṣṭhira asked him about the future cause of the government (sāmraja) of the earth. Mārkaṇḍeya, having given a short description of the other yugas, described in detail the Kali-yuga (b); "in the new Kṛta-yuga, Kalkin (c) will arise." Then Mārkaṇḍeya gave Yudhiṣṭhira some moral precepts and exhortations (III, 190-1).—§ 461: Vamadasacarita (q.v.).—§ 462: Baka-Čakra-samvāda (q.v.).—§ 463: Čibi (q.v.).—§ 464: Nāhuṣa-carita (v. Yayāti).—§ 465, on the same topic: There were two learned and able kings, Vṛṣadardha and Seduka. Seduka knew that Vṛṣadardha had from his boyhood an unuttered vow, that he would give no other metal to brahmanas than gold and silver. He once sent a brahman, who asked him for 1,000 horses for his preceptor, to Vṛṣadardha, who whipped him and then gave him a day's tribute (which was more than the value of 1,000 horses), "because he had whipped him" (III, 196).—§ 466: Čibi (q.v.).—§ 467: Rājanyamahābhāgya (q.v.).—§ 468: Indradyumropākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 469: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira in what condition (age) a man should practise charity, Mārkaṇḍeya enumerated four kinds of futile life and sixteen kinds of futile charity. The brahmanas save others and themselves by japa, mantra, and homa. He next enumerated the brahmanas that should be excluded from grādhas, and gave other moral precepts (of offerings to the gods of flowers and sandals and pastes, entertainment of guests); then he enumerated the persons to whom one should make gifts; the effects of various gifts to brahmanas (food is the best).—§ 470: Yamaloka (q.v.).—§ 471: Precepts about gifts, washing the feet of brahmanas, etc. Blessing upon the reader.—§ 472: Three kinds of purity (speech, deed, water): by adoring sandhyā and reciting Gayatri one is protected against sin and evil results from gifts, against inauspicious stars, and against Rākṣasas. Greatness of the brahmanas. The carrying of three staves, etc., are useless if the heart be not pure. They who do not commit sin in manas, word, deed, and buddhi do really practise austerities (v. 13468: by tapas one may attain Svarga, by charity enjoyment, by knowledge salvation (mokṣa), by bathing in tīrthas purgation from sins).—§ 473: On the effects of various gifts at various times (v. 13480: the first offspring of fire is gold, earth springs from Viṣṇu, and the cows from the sun; he, therefore, that gives away gold, land, and kine, has given the three worlds [of Agni, Viṣṇu, and the Sun]) (III, 200).—§ 474: Having heard the history of Indradyumna, Yudhiṣṭhira, saying that Mārkaṇḍeya knew the gods, Dānavas, Rākṣasas, the royal genealogies and the genealogies of the rajas, and Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Kinnaras, and Apsarasas, asked him about Kṛvāḷpa Iṣṭvaku. Mārkaṇḍeya related: Dhūmdhūmaropākhyāna (q.v.).—§§ 479-87: Pativratopākhyāna (q.v.).—§§ 488-94: Agirasa (q.v.).—§§ 495-8: Skandotpatti (q.v.).—§ 499: Skanda-Čakra-samvāda (q.v.).—§§ 500-1: Skandopākhyāna (q.v.).—§ 502: Manuṣyagrakatakhana (q.v.).—§§ 503-7: Skandayuddha (q.v.).—§§ 508-9: Kārttikeyastava (q.v.).

Mātaliya, adj. ("relating to Mātali"). § 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 331 (°am upākhyānam, i.e. Mātaliyopākhyāna).

[Mātaliyopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Mātali"). (Cf. Mātaliyam upākhyānam.) § 564 (Bhagavad.). The holy Rshi (bhagavān rshiḥ) Kaṇva said to Duryōdhana in the assembly of the Kurus: Brahmdn, the grandsire of the universe (Lokapitāmahaḥ), is indestructible and eternal. The holy Rshis (bhagavāntāṃ rshiḥ) Nara and Nārāyaṇa are of the same character. Of all the sons of Aditi, Vishṇu alone is eternal . . . In this connection is cited an old story: Mātali, the charioteer of Indra, had, by his wife Sudharma, one beautiful daughter, Guṇakeçī. As he found no suitable husband for her amongst D., Dai., G., or men and R., Mātali set out for the Nāgaloka (V, 97). On the way Nārada, proceeding to visit Varuṇa, followed Mātali, and first showed him the abode of Varuṇa, surrounded by his sons and grandsons. Varuṇa's son Pushkara had been chosen as husband by Soma's daughter Jyotsnākālī (who had [before] chosen (so PCR.) the eldest and foremost of Aditi's sons (i.e. Sūrya, Nīl.)). He then showed him the abode, entirely made of gold, of the liquor (Varuṇyam): to the possession of that liquor (surā) the gods owe their being Surāḥ. He showed him also the weapons that had belonged to the Daityas and had been obtained by the gods as a booty of war; when hurled at the foe they always return into the hand that hurls them. Here dwelt in days of yore many tribes of Rā. and Dai. Here is that fire of blazing flames and the discus of Vishṇu; and that knotty bow that was created for the destruction of the world; it is always protected with great vigilance by the gods, and it is from this bow that the one wielded by Arjuna has taken its name; it is endued with the strength of 100,000 bows; it punishes all wicked (raksho-bandhushu) kings; it was first created by Brahmdn and praised by Çakra (B. Çakreṇa); it is held by the sons of the Lord of waters. He showed him also Varuṇa's umbrella in the umbrella-house, always dropping water that cannot be seen. Innumerable are the wonders to be seen here (V, 98). In the very centre of the Nāgaloka is the city Pātālā with Daityas and Dānavas, the Asura fire, fed by water; here the gods, having first vanquished their foes, quaffed the amṛta and deposited the residue; the Āditya Hayaçiras; from here Airāvata takes up water in order to impart it to the clouds, and it is that water which Indra pours down as rain; aquatic animals, the timī, etc., which subsist on the rays of the moon; here Mahādeva practised ascetic austerities for the benefit of all creatures; maharshis addicted to the vow of go (govratinaḥ); here in the race of the celebrated elephant Supratika were born the elephants Airāvata (the king of his tribe), Vāmana, Kumuda, and Añjana; an egg in the waters from the commencement of the creation, whence, when the end of the world comes, a fire bursts forth and consumes the three worlds, etc. Mātali said: "No one here seems to be eligible" (V, 99). In Pātālā is Hiranyapura, built by the Dānava (so PCR.; B. and C. Viçvakarmaṇā) Māya, belonging to the Daityas and Dānavas, who in days of yore lived here having obtained boons, exhibiting 1,000 different kinds of illusion, incapable of being vanquished by Çakra, Yama, Varuṇa, or Kubera, etc. The Kālakañjas (Asuras, who sprang from Vishṇu (?), so PCR.: Asurāḥ Kālakañjāç ca tathā Vishṇupadodbhavaḥ; C. Kālaka^o) and the Yātudhānas (Rakshasas, who sprang from the feet of Brahmdn (?), so PCR.: Nairṛtā Yātudhānāç ca Brahmapadodbhavaç ca yo) (description); the Nivātakavacas (Dānavas); "many times,

O Mātali! thou with thy son Gomukha and Indra hadst to retreat before them"; description of their abodes (the gems arkasphatika, vajrasāra, padmarāga, etc.). Mātali would not choose a son-in-law among the Dānavas, the enemies of the gods; "as regards thyself (i.e. Nārada), I know that thy heart is ever set on fomenting quarrels (himsātmakam)" (V, 100). Then the world of the Suparnas, who subsist on snakes and have sprung from the six sons of Garuḍa: Sumukha, etc. (a), of Kacyapa's and Vinata's race, adorned with the Çrivatsa, belonging to the kshatriya order, for they never attain to brahmanhood (brāhmanyam) in consequence of their preying upon their kinsmen; they are shown favour by Vishṇu, and adore Vishṇu. The names of the principal are: Suparnacūḍa, etc. (β) (V, 101). Rasātala is the seventh stratum below the earth; here dwells Surabhi, the mother of kine, born of the amṛta; her milk springs from the essence of the six different kinds of tastes; she sprang of old from the mouth of Brahmān, who was gratified with drinking the amṛta and vomited the best of things (i.e. the cow and the brahman, PCR.). A jet of her milk created the Milky Ocean (kāṣṭhānidhi), covered with white foam that is the food of the ascetics (munisattamāḥ) Phenapāḥ ("Foam-drinkers"); the very gods fear them because of their austerities. From Surabhi are born the four kine that support the quarters (diçāṃ pālyak): in the East Surūpā, in the South Hamsikā, in the West Subhadra, in the North (dharmyām Ailavilasañjñitām) Sarvakāmadughā. The gods and the Auras, making Mandara their pole, churned the Ocean, and obtained Vāruṇī, Lakshmi, amṛta, Uccaiḥśravas, and Kaustubha. Surabhi milks sudhā to those who live on sudhā (i.e. the Nāgas, PCR.), svadhā to those who live on svadhā (i.e. the Pitrs, PCR.), and amṛta to those who live on amṛta (i.e. the gods, PCR.). The gāthā that was sung by the dwellers of Rasātala in days of old is still heard to be recited in the world by persons of learning: "Neither in the Nāga-loka, nor in Svarga, nor in a vimāna, nor in heaven (Tripiṣṭhapa) is residence so happy as in Rasātala" (V, 102). The city of Bhogavati resembles Indra's city Amardrati; it is ruled over by Vāsuki, the king of the Nāgas; here dwells Çaṣha (b); here dwell the innumerable Nāgas (description), the sons of Surasā, wearing svastika, etc. The principal are Vāsuki, etc. (γ). Mātali wished to get for his son-in-law the Nāga Sumukha of Airāvata's race, the son of Cikura (who had been not long before slain by Garuḍa), and the grandson of Āryaka Kauravya and the daughter's son of Vāmana (V, 103). Nārada introduced Mātali to Āryaka as the friend and charioteer of Indra, who drives his chariot drawn by 1,000 steeds, and thereby has vanquished the enemies of the gods. Āryaka objected that Garuḍa, who had slain Cikura, when he left these regions had said that after a month he would devour Sumukha also. According to a proposal of Mātali, they all visited Indra and Vishṇu; Vishṇu proposed to give amṛta to Sumukha; but Indra disagreed on account of the prowess of Garuḍa; instead he gave him an excellent lease of life, and having married Mātali's daughter he returned home (V, 104). Garuḍa made remonstrances to Indra, saying that he, like him, can without any fatigue bear the weight of the three worlds; that he had slain the Daityas Çrulaçrī, etc. (δ); that he not only perches on Vishṇu's flagstaff, but sometimes carries him with all his friends on his back, and he can carry Vishṇu without fatigue on only one of his feathers. Vishṇu shows him that he cannot bear the weight of his one right arm;

then he threw Sumukha with the toe of his foot upon Garuḍa's breast. And from that time Garuḍa has ever lived (in friendship?) with that snake. Kaṇva continued: "In the same way, O Duryodhana! thou canst not counter Bhīma, etc. (ε)." Duryodhana, fixing his eyes on Kaṇva, burst into laughter, saying: "I am precisely what the creator has made me" (V, 105).

[Mausalaparvan] ("the section relating to the battle with clubs," the 16th of the great and the 98th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.; cf. Mausala). § 793: Vaiśampāyana said: When the 36th year [after the great battle] was reached, Yudhishtira beheld many unusual portents (specification). A little while afterwards he heard of the wholesale carnage of the Vṛṣṇis in a battle with clubs, where only Kṛṣṇa and Rāma had escaped with life; he summoned his brothers and took counsel with them; they were filled with grief; the death of Kṛṣṇa they could not believe. Janamejaya inquired about the particulars of the destruction of the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas. Vaiśampāyana said:  When the 36th year . . . (cf. above). Asked by Janamejaya, cursed by whom the Vṛṣṇis, etc. (a), met with destruction, Vaiśampāyana said: Sārana, etc., saw Viçramitra, Kaṇva, and Nārada arrived at Dvārakā; they disguised Čamba as a woman, calling her the wife of Babhrū, and asked the ascetics what [sort of child] this one would bring forth. The ascetics answered: "This Čamba will bring forth a terrible iron club for the destruction of the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas, except Rāma (who will enter the ocean) and Kṛṣṇa (whom Jarā will pierce while lying on the ground)." Then they went to Kṛṣṇa. Informed of what had taken place, Kṛṣṇa summoned all the Vṛṣṇis and told them of it, but did not try to annul the curse. The next day Čamba actually brought forth an iron club. The fact was reported to the king: [Ugrasena], who caused it to be reduced into powder and thrown into the sea. At the command of Āhuka, etc. (β), the manufacture of spirits was forbidden among all the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas, under the penance of being impaled alive with all one's kinsmen. All the citizens (knowing that it was the command of Rāma also) bound themselves by the rule (XVI, 1). [The embodied form of] Time every day wandered about their houses, like a man of terrible and fierce aspect, bald head, black and tawny of complexion; they shot innumerable arrows at him, without being able to pierce him. Also other dreadful portents of calamity were daily seen by the Vṛṣṇis throughout the city (description). They showed disregard for brahmins, P., and D., etc., except Rāma and Kṛṣṇa, etc. When the Pāñcājanya was blown in their houses, asses brayed aloud from every direction. Kṛṣṇa, seeing that the day of the new moon coincided with the 13th [and 14th] lunation, summoned the Yadavas and said: The 14th lunation has been made the 15th by Rāhu once more, as at the time of the great battle of the Bharatas (v. the note of PCR. on p. 5). He understood that the 36th year had come according to the curse of Gāndhārī, and that the omens were similar to those which Yudhishtira had noticed when the two armies were arrayed in order of battle. He endeavoured to bring about those occurrences which would make Gāndhārī's words true. He commanded the Vṛshnis to make a pilgrimage to some sacred water, and caused the messengers to proclaim a journey to the sea-coast (XVI, 2). At that time the Vṛshni ladies dreamt every night that a black woman with white teeth, entering their abodes, laughed aloud and ran through Dvārakā stealing [from them]; the men dreamt of vultures that devoured the Vṛshnis and Andhakas in the houses and fire-chambers; their ornaments, etc., were taken away by Rā. The iron discus of Kṛṣṇa, given by Agni, with a nave of adamant, ascended to heaven. Kṛṣṇa's chariot was dragged away by his four steeds over the ocean; Kṛṣṇa's and Baladeva's standards (resp. Garuda and a palmyra), which were reverently worshipped by those two heroes, were taken away by Aps., who day and night called upon the Vṛshnis and Andhakas to set out on a pilgrimage to some sacred water. They prepared various kinds of edibles and spirits, and set out to Prabhāsa. Uddhava took leave of them and Kṛṣṇa before departing [from the world]. The Vṛshnis, mixing with spirits the food that had been cooked for the brahmins, gave it to apes, and began revels with drinking, so also Rāma, etc. (γ); Yuyudhāna blamed Kṛtavarman for the nightly slaughter, and was applauded by Pradyumna, but was rebuked by Kṛtavarman with having killed Bhāricravas while sitting in prāya; Kṛṣṇa cast an angry glance [at Kṛtavarman], and Sātyaki informed him of the story of the gem Syamantaka, which was Satrajit's; Satyabhāma, weeping, approached Kṛṣṇa, and sitting on his lap enhanced his anger; Sātyaki swore that he would cause Kṛtavarman to follow the five sons of Draupadī, etc. (δ), whom he had slain with the help of Aqvathāman, and he severed his head in the very sight of Kṛṣṇa and began to strike down others; Kṛṣṇa rushed forward to prevent him from doing further mischief, and the Bhojas and Andhakas all assailed him; Kṛṣṇa did not interfere; they struck Yuyudhāna with the pots from which they had been eating; Pradyumna rushed forward to rescue Yuyudhāna; they were both slain. Kṛṣṇa in wrath took up a handful of orakā grass, which became a terrible iron club, with which Kṛṣṇa slew all that came before him. The Andhakas, etc. (ε), also took up blades of the orakā grass, which were converted into iron clubs, and struck one another in consequence of the curse of the brahmins; son killed father and vice versa, inebriated with spirits. Beholding that Çāmba, etc. (ζ), were slain, Kṛṣṇa exterminated the Vṛshnis and the Andhakas. Babhrū and Dārūka told him now to go to Rāma (XVI, 3). Dārūka, Kṛṣṇa, and Babhrū, seeking Rāma, saw him sitting thoughtfully, reclining his back against a tree. Kṛṣṇa sent Dārūka to inform Arjuna and tell him to come quickly, and he also dispatched Babhrū to protect the ladies against robbers; but as soon as Babhrū had proceeded to a distance, an iron club attached to the mallet of a hunter came and slew him. Kṛṣṇa then, entering Dvāravātī, told his father to protect the ladies till Arjuna came, saying that he would practise ponances with Rāma. When he came to Rāma, the latter had applied himself to yoga, and from his mouth issued a huge white Nāga with 1,000 heads and red eyes, who proceeded to the ocean, and was received by the ocean and many celestial snakes (and many sacred rivers): Karkotaka, etc. (η). After

Rāma's death Kṛṣṇa wandered for some time, and then sat down, thinking of Gāndhārī (§ 619) and Durvasas (§ 773e), and the destruction of the Vṛshnis, Andhakas, and Kurus, whence he concluded that the hour [of his death] had come; he then restrained his senses [in yoga]; though he was the Supreme Deity, he wished to die in order to dispel all doubts, etc., and to make the words of Durvasas true. The hunter Jara, mistaking Kṛṣṇa for a deer, pierced him at the heel with an arrow; coming up, he beheld a man dressed in yellow robes, rapt in yoga, with many arms; he became filled with fear; Kṛṣṇa comforted him and then ascended upwards, and was received in heaven by Indra, etc. (θ) (XVI, 4). Meanwhile Dārūka came and informed the Pāṇḍavas of the slaughter of the Vṛshnis, etc. (ι). Arjuna with Dārūka proceeded to Dvārakā; when Kṛṣṇa's 16,000 wives saw Arjuna, they uttered a loud cry; the city seemed to Arjuna to be the fierce river Vaitaraṇī; Arjuna, Satyā (the daughter of Satrajit), and Rukmiṇī fell down and wailed; then praising Kṛṣṇa and comforting the ladies, Arjuna went to Vasudeva (XVI, 5), whom he found lying on the ground and burning with grief; Vasudeva lamented (κ) and said he would die by abstaining from food (XVI, 6). Arjuna said that the hour had come for the Pāṇḍavas also for departing [from the world] (λ); he would, however, first remove to Indraprastha the women, the children, and the aged of the Vṛshnis. Saying to Dārūka that he wished to see the chief officers of the Vṛshnis, Arjuna entered the hall of the Yādavas called Sudharmā, where he said to the citizens and ministers that he would take away with him the remnants of the Vṛshnis and Andhakas, as the sea would soon engulf the city; Vajra would be their king at Indraprastha; they would set out on the seventh day at sunrise. Arjuna passed that night in the mansion of Kṛṣṇa. At dawn Vasudeva by yoga attained to the highest goal; the ladies were in despair. His four wives, Devakī, Bhadrā, Rohiṇī, and Madirā, ascended the funeral pyre, and attained to the regions of Vasudeva. When Arjuna had caused Vasudeva and his four wives to be burnt (under immense tokens of sympathy from the women), the boys (headed by Vajra) and the ladies offered oblations of water to Vasudeva. Then Arjuna visited the spot where the Vṛshnis had been killed and caused the last rites to be performed, and caused Rāma and Kṛṣṇa to be cremated. On the seventh day he set out, mounting his chariot, with the ladies and children, the Yādava troops, and other inhabitants, with Kṛṣṇa's 16,000 wives and Vajra; they numbered many millions in all. Then the ocean flooded Dvārakā. They proceeded in slow marches. When they had planted their encampment at Pañcanada, the Ābhīras (Mlecchas) conspired to rob the cavalcade. Arjuna succeeded only with great difficulty in stringing his bow; his celestial weapons would not come to his mind; the Vṛshni warriors failed to rescue the women, who were snatched away by the robbers; Arjuna's shafts soon became exhausted; formerly they had been inexhaustible. Arjuna became very cheerless; he escorted the remnant of the cavalcade to Kurukhetra; he established the son of Kṛtavarman in the city of Mārttikāvata with the remnant of the women of the Bhoja king; the remainder, with children and old men and women, at Indraprastha, with Vajra as their ruler; the son of Yuyudhāna (with old men, etc.) on the banks of the Sarasvatī; the widows of Akrura, notwithstanding the entreaties of Vajra, entered the woods; Rukmiṇī, etc. (μ), ascended the funeral pyre; Satyabhāma and the other wives of Kṛṣṇa entered the woods in order to practise penances in the contemplation of Hari; going beyond Himavat, they took up their abode in Kalapa-grāma. Then Arjuna entered the retreat of Vyasa (XVI, 7). Asked by Vyasa ("Hast thou been sprinkled with water from anybody's nails or hair, etc.?"), Arjuna informed him of what had passed (v) ("500,000 warriors have thus been laid down"). Vyasa said that the Vṛkṣas and Andhakas had been consumed by the brahman's curse; it was destiny: "Kṛṣṇa, as also the Pāṇḍavas, have finished their work; the time has come for your departure from the world," etc. (f). Arjuna entered Hastinapura and informed Yudhishtira of what had taken place (XVI, 8).

[Mokshadharmaparvan] ("the section containing the rule for attaining to emancipation from transmigration," the 90th of the minor parvas of Mhbhr.; cf. Mokshadharmā). § 659: Yudhishtira inquired about the duties in the four stages of life; Bhīshma indicated the attainment of emancipation as the highest of all duties. Yudhishtira asked Bhīshma how grief might be overcome; Bhīshma related the old story of the conversation between a brahman and king Senajit, burning with sorrow on account of the death of his son; dissociation from the world is the grand method of overcoming grief. The brahman cited the verses sung by Pīṅgalā (a fallen woman who was denied the company of her lover through an accident) about the manner in which she had acquired eternal merit; freedom from hope and desire is felicity. King Senajit experienced delight and became very happy (XII, 174). Yudhishtira inquired of Bhīshma as to what constitutes the highest good that man should seek in view of the transient character of time; Bhīshma related the old narrative of a discourse between a brahman, who was devoted to the study of the Vedas, and his son Medhavin, who was well conversant with the religion of emancipation, and acquainted also with the affairs of the world, on the uncertainty of life and the mutability of all things save Brāhman (XII, 175). Yudhishtira asked how happiness and misery come to the rich and the poor; Bhīshma related the old narrative of what was sung by Çampaka, who had achieved emancipation, told in former times by a poor brahman rendered miserable by a bad wife, etc.; the faults of prosperity; in renunciation is the highest good of men (XII, 176). Yudhishtira asked what a man must do to find happiness if he be poor. Bhīshma explained who is a happy man, and related the old narrative of what Mānki had sung when freed from attachments; Mānki found that he was assiduously doomed to disappointments; at last, with a remnant of his property, he purchased a couple of young bulls with a yoke; a camel ran away with them upon its neck; Mānki's observations, quoting Çuka: desire is fraught with sorrow (XII, 177). In this connection reference is made to the old verses sung by the Vidvān king Janaka, who had attained to tranquillity of soul: "even if the whole of Mithilā be consumed in a conflagration I shall incur no loss." Discourse between king Nahusha (i.e. Yayāti) and R. Bodhya about freedom from attachment; Bodhya's six preceptors (Pīṅgalā, etc.) (XII, 178). Yudhishtira wished to know by what conduct a person may succeed in this world and attain to an excellent end. Bhīshma related the old story of the discourse between king Prahlada and a sage who had adopted the Ājagara vow: the indifference of the latter to all worldly objects in view of the inevitability of death (XII, 179). Yudhishtira asked which of these, viz. kinsmen, or acts, or wealth, or wisdom, should be the refuge of man. Bhīshma answered that wisdom should be the refuge, instancing Bali, etc. (a), and related the old story of the discourse between Indra and Kāçyapa, a R.'s son, who was brought to the ground by a vaçya negligently driving his chariot, and who in despair resolved to end his life; Indra appeared to him in the form of a jackal and proved to him the superiority of his status as a human being and a brahman; not to yield to the instigation of the senses constitutes happiness; "thou dost not regret (amarasī) wine (Varuṣī) nor the latraka fowls; there is no drink and no food more delicious than these; . . . the vilest Pukkasa or Candala never wishes to give up his life." Kacyapa gave up the desire of ending his life; he knew the jackal to be Indra, worshipped him, and returned home (XII, 180). Yudhishtira asked whether gifts, sacrifices, penances, and dutiful services to preceptors are productive of merit. Bhisma's discourse on righteousness and sin and their respective consequences on life (XII, 181).—§ 660: Yudhishtira inquired about him who has created the universe and to whom it returns when dissolution comes. Bhisma related the old narrative of the sacred words that M.-r. Bhrgu uttered in reply to the questions of Bharadvaja, on the Kailasa summit, explaining to him the cosmogony, i.e. Bhrgu-Bharadvaja-samvāda (b) (XII, 182-192).—§ 661: Yudhishtira asked Bhisma about the ordinances about conduct. Bhisma's discourse on the characteristics of the wicked and the good ("Sūrya should always be worshipped," etc.), and the duties that all men should practise, quoting D.-r. Nārada; "one who has abstained from meat should not take meat even if it be sanctified with mantras from the Yajurveda" (XII, 193). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhisma discoursed on adhyātma; the nature of the three attributes of Goodness, Passion, and Darkness; the distinction between matter (sattva) and soul (kshetrajñā); the highest end to be obtained is emancipation (XII, 194). Bhisma discoursed on the four kinds of yoga; "M.-r., obtaining a knowledge of the same, attain to eternal success (siddhiṃ) even here" (XII, 195). Yudhishtira inquired after the fruits of the silent recitation of sacred mantras; Bhisma wanted to recite the old narrative of the discourse between Yama, a brahman, and Time (v. infra, ch. 199); on Saṅkhya, "otherwise called the Vedānta," and Yoga, Brāhman, etc. (XII, 196). Yudhishtira inquired about the other aims of silent reciters; Bhisma indicated the different aims realized by different kinds of reciters (XII, 197); the nature of the hell into which reciters may sink; the regions of Lp., etc. (a), are hells compared to the region of the Supreme Soul, i.e. to emancipation (XII, 198).—§ 662: Yudhishtira wished to hear in full the dispute between Time, Mṛtyu, Yama, Sūrya's son Ikshvāku, and a brahman, referred to above (v. ch. 196); Bhisma related this old story, i.e. Jāpakopākhyāna (b) (XII, 199-200).—§ 663: Yudhishtira inquired about the results of the yoga of knowledge, of all the Vedas, and of observances and vows; Bhisma related the old discourse between Manu Prajāpati and his disciple M.-r. Bṛhaspati (the foremost of D.-r.), in days of old, who had studied the Ṛcs, etc. (a); Bṛhaspati asked how an embodied being departs from one body and attains to another; acts result from the desire of obtaining happiness and avoiding misery; the efforts for the acquisition of knowledge arise from the desire of avoiding both happiness and misery; it is by avoiding acts that one succeeds in entering into Brāhman; the nature of Brāhman (XII, 201); continuation of Manu's discourse on the nature of emancipation and the soul; the soul takes its character from the body; how the soul leaving one body enters into another (XII, 202); though invisible, the soul exists (XII, 203); continuation of Manu's discourse, explaining how the soul may be seen (XII, 204); continuation of Manu's discourse, explaining how grief may be avoided; how Brāhman may be attained (XII, 205); abstention from acts is the highest religion (XII, 206).—§ 664: Yudhishtira asked Bhisma about the nature of the Supreme Deity (Vishnu, Nārāyaṇa, etc. (a)). Bhisma's discourse, which he had heard from Rāma Jāmadagnya, etc. (β), on the nature of Nārāyaṇa or Govinda, etc. (γ); the Asura Madhu (δ); Brahmān's seven will-born sons (ε), etc. (a). Madhusūdana (Kṛṣṇa) created day and night, etc. (ζ); then from his mouth he created 100 brahmanas, from his arms 100 kshatriyas, from his thighs 100 vaicyas, and from his feet 100 śūdras, and then he made Dhātṛ (i.e. Brahmān, PCR) the lord and ruler of all created beings; Brahmān also became the expositor of the knowledge of the Vedas; Virūpāksha he made the ruler of the spirits and ghosts and Mātṛs; Yama the ruler of P. [and] all sinful men; Kubera the lord of all treasures; Varuṇa the lord of the waters and of all aquatic animals; Indra the lord of the gods. In those times men lived as long as they chose, without any fear of Yama; offspring was begotten by a fiat of the will. In the Tretā age children were begotten by touch alone. In the Dvāpara age sexual intercourse originated. In the Kali age men have come to marry and live in pairs. The sinful creatures of the earth, born in the southern region and called Andhrakas, etc. (η); in the northern region, the Yaunas, etc. (θ); their practices are similar to those of Candālas and ravens and vultures; in the Kṛta age they were nowhere on earth; it is from the Tretā that they have had their origin; when the terrible interval [between the Tretā and the Dvāpara] came, the kshatriyas engaged in battle. D.-r. Nārada, that observer of all the worlds, has said that Kṛṣṇa is the supreme god (XII, 207).—§ 665: Yudhishtira asked who are the first Prajāpatīs, and who the great Ṛṣis, and in which direction they dwell. Bhisma enumerated Brahmān's seven sons (a), mentioned in the Purāṇas as seven Brahmāns. The Prajāpatīs that came after these are: (a) in Atri's race: Prācīnabarhī (Brahmayoniḥ sanātanaḥ) > the ten Prācetasah > Prajāpati Dakṣa or Ka; (b) Marici had one son Kacyapa or Ariṣṭanemi. Atri had another son born of his loins, the handsome and princely Soma; he performed penances for 1,000 celestial yugas. Aryaman and his sons were rulers and creators of all creatures. Çaçabindu had 10,000 wives, and begot upon each of them 1,000 sons, who would call none Prajāpati save themselves; the ancient (purāṇah) brahmanas call creatures (prajāṃ) Çaçabindarī; this race became the progenitor of the Vṛṣṇi race. "These that I have named are the illustrious Prajāpatīs." The deities are: the twelve Ādityas (all sprung from Kacyapa) (β); the Açvins (γ) (the sons of Martāṇḍa—ashtamasya); these were first called the gods and the two classes of Pitṛs (ṛte ca pūram sūrāḥ celi dvividhāḥ pitarāḥ smṛtāḥ). Tvaṣṭṛ's son was the handsome Viçvarūpa; Ajaikapād, etc. (δ) [are the eleven Rudras]; these were reckoned as gods at the time of the Prajāpati Manu; the Siddhas and Sādhyas, different as to perfect conduct and youth; the Rbhus and the Maruts were also classes of gods (C. devānāṃ cādito gaṇah; B. codito gaṇah); thus are enumerated the Viçvedevas and the Açvins. Amongst them the Ādityas are kshatriyas, the Maruts vaicyas, the Açvins (engaged in penances) śūdras; the gods [called] Āngirasaḥ are brahmanas. The person who at morn recites the names of these deities becomes cleansed of all his sins. Yavakṛta, etc. (ε), and Kanva, etc. (ζ), all reside in the east; Unmūca, etc. (η), in the south; Ushaṅgu, etc. (θ), in the west; Ātreya, etc. (ι), in the north. These are the witnesses [of the universe] and the creators of all the worlds. By reciting these names one is cleansed of all

one's sins; by sojourning to these points a person becomes cleansed of all his sins and succeeds in returning home in safety (XII, 208).—§ 666: Yudhishthira inquired about the reason of Kṛṣṇa's assuming the form of an animal. Bhīṣma said that formerly, while hunting, he arrived at the hermitage of Mārkaṇḍeya, where he was honoured by R., and M.-ṛ. Kaśyapa related: In former days Dā. and As. Naraka, etc., oppressed D. and D.-ṛ.; the earth seemed to be oppressed with a heavy weight. The Ādityas repaired to Brahmān, who said that Viṣṇu in the form of a boar would slay the As. Some time afterwards Viṣṇu (having yoga for his soul, etc.) penetrated into the earth (into Rasātala) in the form of a boar, and uttering tremendous roars (nādena), at which even D. with Indra became terror-stricken, pierced the As. with his hoofs, etc., whence he came to be called Sanātana. Brahmān explained to the gods that he was Kṛṣṇa, the Creator of all things, the foremost of yogins, etc., he from whose navel the primeval lotus had sprung, etc. (XII, 208).—§ 667: Yudhishthira inquired about the nature of that high yoga by which emancipation may be attained. Bhīṣma related the old narrative of a discourse between a preceptor (the foremost of R.) and his disciple on emancipation; on adhyātma (undisclosed in the very Vedas); Vāsudeva is the supreme [cause] of the universe; he is the origin of the Vedas (viśvasya brahmaṇo mukhaṃ), etc.; he created P., D., R., Y., Rā., N., As., and men, etc.; having reduced everything into non-existence, he once more, in the beginning of a yuga, creates Prakṛti; at the end of every yuga the Vedas and all other scriptures disappear; in consequence of the grace of Svayambhū, M.-ṛ. through their penances, first re-acquire the Vedas and Itihāsas; Svayambhū knows the Vedas, Brhaspati their Angas, Bhārgava (i.e. Çakra) the Nitiśāstra (science of morality, etc.), Nārada the Gāndharva (the science of music), Bharadvāja the science of arms (Dhanurgraham), Gārgya the history of the celestial Rshis (devarshisavitam), Kṛṣṇātreya medicine, diverse other teachers the philosophical systems (Nyāyatantrāṇi, cf. Nil.). Neither D. nor R. were [originally] able to apprehend Brāhman; only Nārāyaṇa knew it; from him R., the foremost D., As., and R.-ṛ. of old learnt it. Etymology of Puruṣa (navadvāraṃ puram vyāpya çete, v. 7679) (XII, 210). Continuation of Bhīṣma's discourse explaining how the inclinations and instincts of a past life run towards the soul in a new life (XII, 211). Continuation of Bhīṣma's discourse on abstention from acts and the nature of knowledge. Asked by Yudhishthira, Bhīṣma discoursed on the faults that should be got rid of in order to attain to emancipation (XII, 212). Continuation of Bhīṣma's discourse (XII, 213). Bhīṣma's discourse on the means of conquering the senses (XII, 214). Bhīṣma's discourse on the consequences of attachment to the objects of the senses (XII, 215). Bhīṣma's discourse on the nature and causes of dreams. Darkness has been adopted by the Asuras; Brāhman is difficult of attainment by either the gods or the Asuras; goodness, passion, and darkness belong to the deities and the Asuras; goodness is the attribute of the deities, while the two others belong to the Asuras; Brāhman transcends all those attributes; it is pure knowledge, and is obtainable only by withdrawing the mind and the senses from all external objects (XII, 216). Who may be said to know Brāhman; the distinction between pravṛtti and nivṛtti; the respective nature of prakṛti and puruṣa; the nature and consequences of yoga (XII, 217).—§ 668: Yudhishthira inquired about the conduct by which

Janaka the king of Mithilā attained to emancipation. Bhīṣma recited the old narrative of the conversation between Pañcaçikha and Janaka of Mithilā, i.e. Pañcaçikha-vākya (b) (XII, 218-219).—§ 669: Yudhishthira asked what leads to happiness and what to misery and what to freedom from fear; Bhīṣma's discourse on self-restraint (XII, 220). Yudhishthira's question about the merits of subsisting upon the remnants of sacrifices, and whether fasting be really a penance (tapas); Bhīṣma explained that though fasting is generally regarded as a penance, it is not so in reality, being rather an impediment to the acquisition of the knowledge of soul; living upon sacrificial remnants is regarded as fasting of the highest merit (XII, 221).—§ 670: Yudhishthira asked whether man should be regarded as the real doer of acts. Bhīṣma related the old narrative of a discourse between the Daitya king Prahlāda, who was unattached to worldly objects, etc., and Indra, who questioned Prahlāda about the best means by which knowledge of the soul can be attained, etc., and was instructed by him. Indra became filled with wonder, and, having worshipped the Daitya king, proceeded to his own abode (XII, 222).—§ 671: Yudhishthira inquired about the kind of intelligence by adopting which a king deprived of kingdom and prosperity may still live on earth. Bhīṣma related the old narrative of the discourse between Indra and Virocana's son Bali, i.e. Bali-Vāsava-samvāda (b) (XII, 223-225).—§ 672: Bhīṣma related the old narrative of the discourse between Indra and the Asura Namuci, i.e. Çakra-Namuci-samvāda (b) (XII, 226).—§ 673: Yudhishthira asked as to what is good for a man sunk into dire distress. Bhīṣma discoursed on fortitude, quoting the old narrative of the discourse between Bali and Vāsava (Indra), i.e. Bali-Vāsava-samvāda (b) (XII, 227).—§ 674: Yudhishthira inquired about the indications of future greatness and future fall. Bhīṣma related the old story of the discourse between Çrī and Çakra, i.e. Çrī-Vāsava-samvāda (b) (XII, 229).—§ 675: Yudhishthira inquired about the practices that lead to the attainment of Brāhman. Bhīṣma said that one engaged in the religion of nivṛtti, etc., can attain to Brāhman, quoting the old narrative of the discourse between the wise Jaigīshavya and Asita Devala, who was instructed by Jaigīshavya to behave indifferently towards praise and blame, etc., "D., G., Pç., and Rā. cannot reach the rank which is his who has attained to the highest end" (XII, 230).—§ 676: Requested by Yudhishthira about the man that is dear to all, Bhīṣma quoted the words that Kṛṣṇa, asked by Ugrasena, said to him on a former occasion on the subject of D.-ṛ. Nārada's qualifications (XII, 231).—§ 677: Yudhishthira inquired about the origin and the end of all creatures, the nature of their thoughts and acts, of the divisions of time, and of the allotted periods of life in the respective epochs or yugas; having heard the discourse of Bhṛgu to B.-ṛ. Bharadvāja, he had become attached to yoga. Bhīṣma recited the old narrative of what the divine Vyāsa said to his son Çuka (who had studied the Vedas with all their branches, and the Upanishads, and was desirous of leading the life of brahmacharya) about these very questions. Vyāsa said: Only Brāhman is without beginning and without end. R. have measured time thus: 15 winks of the eye = 1 kashthā; 30 kashthās = 1 kala; 30 $\frac{1}{2}$ kalas = 1 muhūrta; 30 muhūrtas = 1 day and night; 30 days and nights = 1 month (= 1 day and night of the Pitṛs, the lighted fortnight being their day and the dark fortnight their night); 12 months = 2 ayanas = 1 year = 1 day and night of the gods (udagayana, i.e. from winter solstice to summer solstice = the day; dukshināyana, i.e. from the latter to the former = the night). Moreover, there are the day and night of Brahmān and his years also. Of the Kṛta-yuga the duration is 4,000 [celestial] years, with a morning (sandhyā) of 400 years and an evening (sandhyāṃśa) of 400; the other yugas gradually decrease by a quarter. In the Kṛta age all duties exist in their entirety, and all live for 400 years (free from disease, etc.); in the other yugas duty, etc., decrease by a quarter. The duties for the several yugas are different. In Kṛta penance is foremost, in Tretā knowledge, in Dvāpara sacrifice, in Kali gift. These 12,000 [celestial!] years constitute a yuga; 1,000 yugas = 1 day of Brahmān (when the universe starts into life) = 1 night of Brahmān (= universal dissolution, the Creator being asleep, having taken recourse to yoga, meditation). Brahmān, waking up, modifies the indestructible Brāhman, etc. (XII, 232). Vyāsa explained the creation, etc. (XII, 233). Vyāsa told how the Supreme Lord merges everything into his soul (XII, 234). Vyāsa discoursed on the duties of a brahman; "they that are good deserve to have even Uccaiḥcravas"; Satyasandha, having offered his life to save a brahman, ascended to heaven; likewise Saṅkṛti's son Rantidava, having given tepid water to Vasishṭha; Ātreya Indradāmana, having given wealth to a deserving person; Çibi Auçinara, having given his limbs and son for the sake of a brahman; the Kāçi king Pratardana, having given his eyes to a brahman; king Dodardha, having given a costly umbrella (with all the people of his kingdom); Saṅkṛti Ātreya, having given instructions to his disciples on Brāhman; Ambarisha, having given eleven arbudas of kine to the brahmins (with all the people of his kingdom); Sāvitrī [i.e. Sāvitra = Karna, cf. XIII, 6253], by giving away the ear-rings; Janamejaya, by giving away his own body; Yuvanāçva Vṛshādabhī, by giving gems, a mansion, and beautiful women; the Vidaha king Nimi gave away his kingdom, Jāmadagnya (Paraçu-Rāma) the whole earth, Gaya the earth with her towns (to the brahmins); Vasishṭha, when the clouds ceased to pour rain, kept alive all creatures; Karandhama's son Maruta, by giving away his daughter to Angiras, ascended to heaven; king Brahmadatta Pāṇḍulya, by giving the jewel Çaṅkha (to brahmins); king Mitrāsaha, by giving his dear wife Madayanti to Vasishṭha (with that wife of his); R.-r. Sahasrajit, having given his life for the sake of a brahman; king Çatadyumna, having given to Mudgala a house made of gold, etc.; the Çalva king Dyutimat, having given unto Reika his kingdom; R.-r. Lomapāda, having given his daughter Çāntā to Rahyaçrnga (obtained all his wishes); R.-r. Madirāçva, by giving his daughter to Hiranyahasta; king Prasenajit, by giving 100,000 cows with calves; etc. (XII, 235). Continuation of Vyāsa's discourse on the duties of a brahman: the knowledge that should be acquired (a); knowledge is necessary for emancipation (XII, 236). The different stages of a yogin's progress (XII, 237). Asked by Çuka, Vyāsa discoursed on the character of that knowledge which leads to emancipation (XII, 238). Vyāsa's discourse on whether acts are obligatory or optional; "the men of the Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali yugas are inspired with doubts; the men of the Kṛta yuga are devoted to penances, etc. In the beginning of the Tretā, the Vedas and sacrifices and the divisions of caste and the several modes of life exist in their entirety; in consequence, however, of the duration of life having decreased in Dvāpara, all these things likewise decline; in the Dvāpara age, and even in the Kali, the Vedas are overtaken with perplexity; towards the close of the Kali again it is doubtful if they ever become even visible to the eye" (XII, 239). Asked by Çuka, Vyāsa discoursed on the import of those duties that lead to emancipation; "in the feet [of living creatures] is Vishṇu; in their arms Indra; within the stomach Agni; in the ears are the quarters; in the tongue is speech which is Sarasvatī"; success cannot be attained to without knowledge, penances, subjugation of the senses, and renunciation; the doctrine of knowledge as expounded in the Sāṅkhya system (XII, 240). The doctrine of Yoga (XII, 241). Asked by Çuka, Vyāsa reconciled the declarations of the Veda about acts and abstention from acts (XII, 242). Çuka inquired about how emancipation may be acquired without violating the ordinance about the obligatory character of acts; Vyāsa's discourse on the duties of *brahmacārin*s (XII, 243). Vyāsa's discourse on the duties of the householder (XII, 244). The duties of the forest stage of life. "The fourth stage [of life] is based upon the Upanishads; the duties laid down for it [i.e. renunciation] may be observed in all the stages of life equally; this stage differing from the others comes after domestic and forest life; in this very yuga many learned brahmins have been known to observe this stage; Agastya, etc. (β), were the authors of this course of duties, and themselves observing them have all proceeded to heaven; and so also Sudivataṇḍi (yathāvāso 'kṛtaçramah, i.e. who had no fixed residence), and the numerous Yāgyārāsa, etc. (γ); freed from fear and not being counted among the stars and planets (anakshatrāḥ), [these] are to be seen in the firmament [as] hosts of luminous bodies (jyotiḥśām gaṇāḥ)" (XII, 245). Çuka inquired how one leading the forest mode of life should act wishing to achieve emancipation; Vyāsa's answer about the necessity, after having passed through the first and the second stages, of having recourse to yoga in order to attain to emancipation; the duties to be observed by such a man (XII, 246). Vyāsa's observations on the soul (jīva) and the Supreme Soul (XII, 247). Çuka asked what is adhyātma and whence it comes; Vyāsa's explanation of adhyātma; Çuka asked how one may succeed in understanding the unequal distribution of the five elements in different objects, and which among those elements represents which sense, etc.; Vyāsa's observations on the nature of mind, understanding, and the soul (XII, 248). Continuation (XII, 249). Do. (XII, 250). Çuka inquired about what constitutes the highest duty; Vyāsa's discourse on duties (XII, 251). Continuation (XII, 252). The relation of the senses and their objects to the five primal elements (XII, 253). Persons conversant with the scriptures succeed in beholding the soul, etc.; . . . the practice of yoga has been recommended by Çaṇḍilya (XII, 254). The tree of desire, its seed and roots and branches and leaves and fruit (XII, 255). Bhishma recapitulated the substance of Vyāsa's discourse on the respective attributes of the elements (XII, 256).—§ 678: Yudhisṭhira lamented the carnage caused on the field of Kurukṣetra. Bhishma recited the story of Anukampaka (f) with Mṛtyu-Prajāpati-samvāda (o) (XII, 257-259).—§ 679: Yudhisṭhira asked what is righteousness and whether righteousness is for this world or for the next or for both. Bhishma's answer: the practices of the good, the Smṛtis, and the Vedas, etc., according to R. of old (XII, 260). Continuation (XII, 261).—§ 680: Inquired of by Yudhishtira about righteousness (XII, 262) Bhishma related the old narrative of the conversation of Tulādhara with Jājali on the topic of righteousness, i.e. Tulādhara-Jājali-sampvāda (b) (XII, 263-265).—§ 681: Bhishma related an old narrative of what was recited by king Vicakhyu (B. °khn°) through compassion for all creatures, in condemnation of animal slaughter when he saw the mangled body of a bull and heard the painful groans of the kine in a cow sacrifice, and observed the cruel brahmins gathered there to assist at the ceremonies. "Manu has applauded harmlessness in all acts. . . . The true brahmins realize the presence of Viṣṇu in every sacrifice." Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma said that one should acquire merit and act in such a way that one's body may not languish and suffer pain, and that death may not come (XII, 266).—§ 682: Yudhishtira asked whether one should act speedily or with delay. Bhishma told the old story of what occurred with respect to the wise Cirakārin, the son of Medhātithi Gautama of the race of Āngiras (Āngirasa kule), who came to be called thus because he used to reflect long upon all matters, etc., and was regarded as an idle and foolish person. Once M.-r. Gautama (the foremost of practisers of yoga), witnessing an act of grave misconduct in his wife Ahalyā, in wrath commanded Cirakārin to slay her, and then departed for the woods. Cirakārin began to think for a long while (description), remembering that the father is the performer of garbhādhāna and śmantonnayana, etc., and that the mother is the son's dhātṛi, etc. (etymology of several names of the mother and of the father), etc.; he thought that his mother was not to blame, as Indra had come to her in the form of her husband, etc. When many days had expired Gautama returned, shedding tears of repentance and thinking that the fault committed was due to his own carelessness (etymology of two names of the wife), and now became filled with great joy, and from that time, dwelling in his hermitage, did not live separately from his spouse or his son. He said: "Blessed be thou, O Cirakārika! do thou always reflect long before acting," uttering some verses upon the merits of reflecting long. Gautama at last ascended to heaven with his son (XII, 267).—§ 683: Yudhishtira asked how a king should protect his subjects without injuring anybody. Bhishma related the old narrative of the conversation between Dyumatena and his son king Satyavat, and the words spoken by the latter in behalf of some individuals who had been brought out for execution at the command of his father ("the killing of individuals can never be a righteous act"), quoting the instructions he had received from their grandsires of olden days, as to how kings should rule their subjects in the different ages (a); "when the Kālī age sets in . . . fifteen parts of even that one-fourth of righteousness disappear, one-sixteenth thereof being all that then remains of it," and quoting Manu Svayambhuva (XII, 268).—§ 684: Yudhishtira inquired about the relative superiority of domestic life and yoga. Bhishma recited the old narrative of the discourse between the Yati Kapila and Syūmarāçmi on animal sacrifices, the obligatory character of acts, and the merits of yoga and renunciation. In days of old when Trashtya came to king Nabusha, the latter was on the point of killing a cow in order to show him hospitality; Kapila said, "Alas! ye Vedas"; R. Syūmarāçmi, entering the cow, blamed this saying of Kapila, etc. (XII, 269); the three classes of Pitṛs (a), etc. (XII, 270). Continuation (XII, 271).—§ 685: Yudhishtira asked which among the three, viz. religion, profit, and pleasure, is superior. Bhishma recited the ancient narrative of the benefit that the cloud Kuṇḍadhara (not yet adored by other men) in days of old had conferred upon a poor brahman that was devoted to him, and who had failed to obtain wealth by worshipping the gods. The brahman worshipped the cloud with dhūpas, etc.; the cloud became pleased and said to the brahman that the wise have ordained expiation for brahmanicide, drinking spirits, stealing, etc., but not for one that is ungrateful; "Expectation has a child named Iniquity, Wrath is a child of Envy, Cupidity of Deceit, Ingratitude is barren." After that the brahman, on a bed of kuça-grass and penetrated with the energy of Kuṇḍadhara, beheld all living beings in a dream, and Maṇibhadra in the midst of the gods employed in giving his orders; the gods were engaged in bestowing kingdoms, etc., upon men, etc.; Kuṇḍadhara prostrated himself before the gods in the presence of all Y. and prayed for some favour in behalf of the brahman; Maṇibhadra first offered to give him wealth, but was prevailed upon by Kuṇḍadhara to give virtue alone. The brahman became disgusted with the world and entered the woods and practised severe penances (description), and his mind was firmly set upon virtue; his strength did not diminish, and after a long time he acquired spiritual vision, etc. Kuṇḍadhara then paid him a visit and caused him to see the end that is attained by kings; he beheld thousands of kings sunk in hell, and many living in this world embracing lust and wrath, etc. Kuṇḍadhara said: "With these [vices] all human beings are enchained; the gods are afraid of men; these vices, at the command of the gods, mar and disconcert on every side; no man can become virtuous unless permitted by the gods. . . ." The brahman confessed that he had not appreciated Kuṇḍadhara's favour as he ought to do; Kuṇḍadhara forgave him and disappeared. The brahman roamed through all the worlds, having attained to ascetic success (siddhim) through the grace of Kuṇḍadhara. D., brahmins, Y., good men, and Cā. always adore only the virtuous (XII, 272).—§ 686: Yudhishtira asked what that sacrifice is which is ordained for the sake of virtue alone and not for the acquisition of heaven or wealth. Bhishma related the history, formerly recited by Nārada, of a brahman named Satya, who in order to perform sacrifices lived according to the uñcha vow (description); his wife Pushkaradhārini did not approve of his conduct (i.e. his cruel sacrifices), but at his command she (clad in plumes of peacocks) joined a sacrifice where he was the hoṭr. His neighbour the virtuous Parṇada at the command of Çukra (or, according to a various reading, of Çukra's race, so B., the text of C. is in disorder) addressed him in the shape of a deer, telling him to slay him and sacrifice with him, and Sāvitrī also told him to do so, but in vain; Sāvitrī then entered the sacrificial fire; but the deer (who was Dharma), causing the brahman through spiritual vision to behold Aps. and G., at first made him desire to slay the deer (at which his tapas diminished greatly), but then won him over to the ahimsa religion, and himself assisted him in his sacrifice; "the injury of living creatures forms no part of sacrifice

(leading only to heaven)" (XII, 273).—§ 687: Yudhishtira inquired about how one becomes sinful, or virtuous, by what one attains to renunciation, and by what one wins emancipation, whereafter he was instructed by Bhishma (XII, 274). Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma expounded the means for attaining to emancipation (XII, 275).—§ 688: Continuation of Bhishma's discourse, quoting the old narrative of the discourse between Nārada and Asita Devala, whom Nārada questioned about the origin and destruction of all creatures (XII, 276).—§ 689: Yudhishtira inquired after the means for removing desire. Bhishma related the old narrative of what was said by the Vidisha king to the inquiring Mandavya: "Even if the whole of Mithilā burn in a conflagration, nothing of mine will be burnt down." The brahman Mandavya became filled with joy and betook himself to the path of emancipation (XII, 277).—§ 690: Yudhishtira inquired about the good which one should pursue in view of the transient character of time. Bhishma related the old narrative of a discourse between a father, who was devoted only to the study of the Vedas, and his son Medhavin, who was conversant with the religion of emancipation. The father acted in the way pointed out [by his son] (XII, 278).—§ 691: Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma explained of what behaviour a man should be, of what acts, of what kind of knowledge, etc., in order to be able to attain to Brāhman (XII, 279).—§ 692: Yudhishtira asked when he should succeed in abandoning sovereignty for adopting renunciation. Bhishma's answer stating the certainty of Yudhishtira's acquisition of emancipation, and quoting that discourse which was sung in days of old, viz. the conversation between Dui. (As.) Vṛtra, after he became divested of all his prosperity, and [his preceptor] Uṣanas; Vṛtra said: "Desirous of fighting Indra, I beheld in that battle Hari = Nārāyaṇa, etc. (a)" (XII, 280); while Uṣanas instructed him about Viṣṇu whose head is the infinite place [i.e. emancipation], Sanatkumāra came there and, asked by Uṣanas, instructed Vṛtra; "Viṣṇu is Brahmān, etc." (β); the six colours; the four higher regions (γ); the indestructible and infinite some say is the region of Mahādeva, etc. (δ). Vṛtra became free from sorrow, gave up his life-breaths, and attained to the highest station. Yudhishtira asked whether Kṛṣṇa is identical with the Supreme Deity; Bhishma answered in the affirmative. Yudhishtira's applause of Vṛtra. Bhishma said that the Pāṇḍavas would in the end be numbered among the Siddhas (XII, 281).—§ 693: Yudhishtira asked how Vṛtra, whose virtue and devotion to Viṣṇu and comprehension of the Upanishads and the Vedānta were so great, was vanquished by Indra, and how the battle took place. Bhishma described the battle, i.e. Vṛtra-vadha (δ) (XII, 282-283).—§ 694: Yudhishtira inquired about the origin of fever. Bhishma narrated the Jvarotpatti (δ) (XII, 284).—§ 695: Janamajaya (!) inquired how the horse-sacrifice of Prajāpati Dakṣa Pracetasa was destroyed during the age of Manu Vaivasvata by Çira in consequence of Umā's rage and grief, and how Dakṣa was enabled to reunite the divided limbs of that sacrifice. Vaiṣampāyana (!) narrated the Dakṣhayajña-vināṣa (δ).—§ 696: Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma told the 1,008 names by which Dakṣa adored Çira, i.e. Dakṣa-prokta-Çiva-sahasra-nāma-stotra (δ) (XII, 285).—§ 697: Yudhishtira again inquired about adhyātma, and had it explained by Bhishma (XII, 286).—§ 698: Yudhishtira inquired how sorrow and death may be avoided. Bhishma related the old narrative of the discourse between Nārada and Samāṅga (XII, 287).—§ 699: Yudhishtira asked what is beneficial for one who is not conversant with the scriptures, etc. Bhishma related the old narrative of the discourse between Gūlava and D.-r. Nārada (devoted to yoga) about the ācramas, etc. (XII, 288).—§ 700: Yudhishtira inquired how a king should behave in view of the great object of acquisition, and what attributes he should have for freeing himself from attachments. Bhishma recited the old narrative that was uttered by Tūrṅkshya Arishtanemi to Sagara, who asked his counsel. Sagara acquired those virtues which are productive of emancipation and continued, with their aid, to rule his subjects (XII, 289).—§ 701: Yudhishtira asked why D.-r. Uṣanas Kārya (Bhārgavādyāda) sided with the Asuras and not with the gods, and whence he came to be called Çukra; whence he got such superior excellence, and why he does not succeed in travelling to the centre of the firmament. Bhishma related the Bhava-Bhārgava-samāṅga (δ) (XII, 290).—§ 702: Yudhishtira inquired about the acts by performing which one wins the highest good both here and hereafter. Bhishma narrated what king Janaka in days of yore had inquired of Parāçara about the duties of life. "The sceptic argues: the deities, G., and Dā. have become what they are in consequence of their own nature" (XII, 291). Continuation (XII, 292). "Rantideva obtained success in all the worlds by worshipping the ascetics with offerings of only roots and fruits and leaves. The royal son of Çibi won the highest regions of bliss by gratifying Sūrya along with his companion with offerings of the same kind. . . . Reika's son became the son of Viçvāmitra by adoring the gods with Res. Uṣanas became Çukra by gratifying the god of gods, and by hymning Devī he sports in the firmament. M.-r. Asita, etc. (α), by adoring Viṣṇu with Res and by penances attained to success" (XII, 293). Continuation. "Svayambhū first created Dhātṛ; Dhātṛ created a son who was engaged in upholding all the worlds" (v. the note of PCR., p. 539) (XII, 294). Continuation. "The Asuras could not bear that righteousness that prevailed in the world; multiplying they [in the form of Lust and Wrath, PCR.] entered the bodies of men; then was pride generated in men . . . ; at that time the gods repaired to Çiva and imparted to him their conjoined energy, and he felled to earth with a single shaft those three Asuras, viz. Desire, Wrath, and Cupidity, who were staying in the firmament, along with their very habitations, and also the chief of those Asuras (i.e. Mahāmoha, PCR.); the men again obtained their proper natures and began once more to study the Vedas, etc. Then the seven R. came forward and installed Indra as the chief of the gods, and took upon themselves the task of holding the rod of chastisement over mankind. After the seven R. came king Viprithu, etc., of the kṣatriya order; but there were certain elderly men from whose minds all wicked feelings did not fly away" (XII, 295). Continuation. "Brahmān by penances created all existent objects; Ā., V., etc. (β), have all been crowned with success through their penances" (XII, 296). Asked by Janaka, Parāçara expounded the reason of the difference of colour in men; "originally sprung from Brahmān, all the inhabitants of the earth should have been brahmins." Various kinds of kṣatriyas, etc. (γ), have sprung from the four original orders by intermixture. Janaka asked how those born in pure wombs and those in impure ones all became brahmins.

Parāçara said that it was by cleansing their souls by penances, instancing Vasiṣṭha, etc. (δ). "Originally only four gotras arose: Āngiras, Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, and Bhṛgu; the others have been due to the penances of those that have founded them" (XII, 297). Continuation. "Repairing to the Sarasvatī, etc. (ε) one should make gifts, etc." (XII, 298). Continuation of Parāçara's discourse on duties. Janaka heard everything the R. said and obtained great happiness from it (XII, 299).—§ 703: Yudhiṣṭhira asked what opinion should be entertained about the virtues of truth, self-restraint, forgiveness, and wisdom. Bhīṣma recited the old narrative of the discourse between the Sādhyas and a Swan (haṃsa), who was Brahmān wandering through the three worlds, and having come upon the Sādhyas instructing them about the religion of emancipation; at last the Sādhyas put a series of detached questions, which were answered by the Swan (XII, 300).—§ 704: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discoursed on the difference between the Sāṅkhya and the Yoga [systems of philosophy]; what the kinds of diet are by taking which and what the things are by conquering which a yogin acquires yoga power; "the yogin can at his will enter into and emerge from Brahmān, etc. (α) . . . ; the yogin has Nārāyaṇa for his soul; prevailing over all things, he is capable of creating all things" (XII, 301). Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discoursed on the principles of the Sāṅkhya [philosophy]; these principles have been established by all the puissant Yatis, Kapila, etc.; with the objects are engaged men, Pç., etc. (β); "Viṣṇu is attached to [the organs of] motion, Indra to [those of] strength, Agni to the stomach, etc.; . . . Sattva is attached to the soul; the soul has Nārāyaṇa for its refuge, and he has emancipation for his refuge; emancipation is independent of all refuge; . . . the Prajāpatīs, etc. (γ), fall away from their puissance in course of many long ages; . . . the miseries endured by those that fall into the river Vaitaraṇī in the realms of Yama . . . the swallowing up of the moon and the sun by Rāhu, the falling of stars from their fixed positions and the diversions of constellations from their orbits . . . lead the Sāṅkhyas to seek emancipation"; the faults attaching to one's body; "the knowledge of Vedānta is the island of the ocean of life; . . . Sattva carries the Yatis to Nārāyaṇa; Nārāyaṇa carries them to the Supreme Soul (paramātmānaṃ)."
Yudhiṣṭhira inquired whether there is any consciousness in the emancipated state; Bhīṣma's answer. Praise of the Sāṅkhya philosophy (XII, 302).—§ 705: Yudhiṣṭhira inquired about what does deteriorate and what does not. Bhīṣma related the old narrative of the discourse between R. Vasiṣṭha and king Karṇa-Janaka, who asked for his instruction. "At the end of Brahmān's night (differently Nil. and PCR., cf. note, p. 589), Çambhu of formless soul, etc., awakes, and once more creates that first or eldest of all creatures; the eldest-born being is called Hiranyagarbha = Buddhi = Mahat (Yogeshu) = Vīriṇci = the unborn; in the Sāṅkhya scriptures (Sāṅkhye çāstre) he has many names . . . ; the creations of knowledge and of ignorance; "bodies are possessed by all bodiless creatures, D., etc. (α); . . . transcending the twenty-four topics already adverted to is the twenty-fifth called Viṣṇu." "There are three colours in all: white, red, and dark" (XII, 303). Continuation (XII, 304). Do. (XII, 305). Do. "That which the Yogins behold is precisely that to which the Sāṅkhyas strive to attain" (XII, 306).

Continuation (XII, 307). Vasiṣṭha's discourse on what is Vidyā and what is Avidyā. "Yogins have great regard for the Sāṅkhya system, as also for the Vedas; in the Sāṅkhya system no principle transcending the twenty-fifth is admitted; in the Yoga it is said that Brahmān . . . becomes the personal soul (jīva) only when invested with ignorance; in the Yoga scriptures, therefore, both Brahmān and jīva are spoken of" (PCR.) (XII, 308). Vasiṣṭha's discourse on buddha and abuddha. "I had acquired this knowledge from the eternal Hiranyagarbha himself, who communicated it to me for my having carefully gratified that great Being of very superior Soul . . . ; it has been imparted to thee exactly as I had it from Brahmān himself." Bhīṣma said, "This knowledge was obtained by Vasiṣṭha from Hiranyagarbha, from Vasiṣṭha it was handed over to Nārada, and from this to me" (XII, 309).—§ 706: Bhīṣma recited the conversation between king Vasumat, son of Janaka, and a brahman and R. of Bhṛgu's race, whom Vasumat saw in the forests when in pursuit of deer, and by whom he was instructed. "R.-r. Mahabhiṣa, through want of firmness, fell from heaven; Yayāti, though his merits had become exhausted, succeeded in regaining regions of bliss through his firmness." King Vasumat, withdrawing his mind from the pursuit of desire, set it upon the acquisition of righteousness (XII, 310).—§ 707: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma discoursed on that which is freed from duty and its reverse by reciting the old narrative of the discourse between R. Yājñavalkya and king Daivarditi Janaka, who got instruction from Yājñavalkya. The nine kinds of creation (XII, 311). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the creation of the universe; "10,000 kalpas are said to constitute a single day of the unmanifest one; the duration of his night is equal; when his night expires he awakes, and first creates herbs and plants; he then creates Brahmān or Prajāpati, who springs from a golden egg . . . ; 7,500 kalpas measure the day of Brahmān, and his night is of equal duration; Brahmān (mahān ṛṣiḥ) then creates Ahankāra (i.e. consciousness; bhūtaṃ divyātmakam), etc." (XII, 312). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the destruction of the universe: "Brahmān, who is eternal and undecaying, and who is without beginning and without end, repeatedly creates and destroys all created objects; when his day expires and night comes he becomes desirous of sleep; at such a time the unmanifest and holy one urges the Being called Mahā-Rudra (ahankṛtām naram, i.e. Ahankārābhīmaninam, Nil.), who assumes the form of Sūrya and divides himself into twelve portions, etc.; . . . Consciousness (Ahankārah Prajāpatiḥ) in his turn is swallowed up by the Great Soul (mahān ātmā; v. 11601: the reading of B. is different), who (viçvam) is again swallowed up by Çambhu Prajāpati, [who is] Āniman, etc. (α) . . ." (XII, 313). Yājñavalkya's discourse on adhyātma ("the two feet," etc.), adhibhūta ("the act of walking," etc.), and adhidaivata ("Viṣṇu," etc.) (XII, 314). Yājñavalkya's discourse on sattva, rajas, and tamas (XII, 315). Yājñavalkya's discourse of what is possessed of attributes and what is not possessed of them (XII, 316). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the Yoga philosophy, "conferring eight kinds of puissance and possessed of eight limbs" (XII, 317). Yājñavalkya's discourse on the diverse ends that people attain to as depending on the manner in which the soul (jīva) escapes from its mortal frame (XII, 318). The story of Yājñavalkya's acquisition of the Yajurveda, as a boon from Sūrya, who had been gratified with his penances; Sūrya had said: "Made up of the essence of speech, the goddess Sarasvatī will enter into thy body"; "he then commanded me to open my mouth; Sarasvatī then entered into my body and I began to burn, and plunged into a stream, angry with Sūrya, who told me that the burning would soon cease, and then the whole Veda with its appendix and the Upanishads would appear in me by inward light, and I should edit the entire Çatapatha, and then turn to the path of emancipation, coveted both by Sāṅkhyas and by Yogins. Sūrya then went to the Asta hills. Sarasvatī appeared before me (description). I taught the Çatapathabrāhmaṇa, etc., to 100 good disciples and thereby did what was disagreeable to my maternal uncle [Vaiçampāyana]. I undertook the management of the sacrifice of thy father; there a dispute arose between me and my maternal uncle as to who should be permitted to appropriate the dakṣiṇā for the recitation of the Vedas; in the very presence of Devala I took half of that dakṣiṇā; thy father and Sumantu and Paila and Jaimini, etc., all acquiesced in that arrangement. I had thus got from Sūrya the fifteen Yajushes, and likewise Romaharsha learned the Purāṇas (differently PCR.). Aided by Sarasvatī and Sūrya I then set myself to compile the Çatapathabrāhmaṇa. . . . G. Viçvāvasu (Kāçyapa, v. 11777), conversant with the Vedānta, once put me twenty-four questions relating to the Vedas, and then a twenty-fifth (anvikṣikīm) (a); having thought of Sarasvatī I answered them properly, having expounded to him the fourth science that treats of emancipation, and which is based upon the twenty-fifth principle, i.e. jīva." (The answers to the questions.) The personal soul (jīva) and the Supreme Soul should be regarded as one and the same. This Viçvāvasu thought difficult to understand, quoting Jaigishavya, etc. (β); "M.-r. in Brahmaloka say that Āditya (the sun) himself is thy preceptor." Yājñavalkya instructed him of the relation of the twenty-fifth (jīva) to the twenty-sixth (the Supreme Soul). "Viçvāvasu proceeded towards heaven, and inculcated the science he had obtained from me to the gods in Brahmaloka, etc." Honoured by Daiṇarāṭi, Yājñavalkya left his court; the king gave a million of kine, etc., to a number of brahmins; installing his son in the sovereignty of the Videhas, he adopted the practices of the Yatis, and began to study the science of the Sāṅkhyas and Yogins. "They who wait upon Mahat attain to the regions of Mahat; they who wait upon Consciousness attain to the spot that belongs to Consciousness, etc." "I (Bhishma) got all this knowledge from Janaka, who had obtained it from Yājñavalkya" (XII, 319).—§ 708: Yudhishtira asked how one may avoid decrepitude and death. Bhishma related the old narrative of the Bhikṣu M.-r. Pañcaçikha and king Janaka Vaideha, who put him that same question and was instructed by him (XII, 320).—§ 709: Asked by Yudhishtira as to how it is possible for a householder to attain to emancipation, Bhishma recited the Sulabhā-Janakasamvāda (b) (XII, 321).—§ 710: Yudhishtira inquired how in days of old Çuka Vaiçṇaviki was won over to renunciation (nirvedam āpannaḥ). Bhishma recited the discourse of Vyāsa to Çuka expounding the vanity of worldly attachments. "That sinful wretch who transgresses the ten boundaries that have been fixed by Soṇyambhu himself is obliged to pass his time in great affliction in the wild wastes in the dominions of the king of the Pitrs; that man who is tainted with cupidity . . .

has to go to deep hells . . . and is forced to bathe in the broad river Vaitaraṇi, whose waters are scalding, etc. (description of hell). . . . Very soon the wind of Yama will blow before thee. . . . By performing the duties of the domestic life men attain to the region of Prajāpati or Brhaspati or Indra." Çuka, leaving his father, proceeded to seek a preceptor that could teach him the religion of emancipation (XII, 322).—§ 711: Asked by Yudhishtira, Bhishma discoursed on the efficacy of gifts, sacrifices, penances, services to preceptors, etc. (XII, 323).—§ 712: Çukotpatti (q.v.).—§ 713: Çukakṛti (q.v.).—§ 714: Çukakṛtya (q.v.).—§ 715: Çuka-Nārada-samvāda (q.v.).—§ 716: Çukābhipātana (q.v.) (XII, 324-334).—§ 717: Yudhishtira asked who the Supreme Deity is, etc. Bhishma recited the old story of the discourse between Nārada and R. Nārāyaṇa in the hermitage of Badari, i.e. Nārāyaṇīya (b), including the story of Upariçara (c) and Brahma-Rudra-samvāda (d) (XII, 335-352).—§ 718: Asked by Yudhishtira about the foremost duties of men belonging to the different modes of life, Bhishma related the discourse on this topic in days of yore between D.-r. Nārada and Indra, i.e. Uñchavṛtty-upākhyāna (b) (XII, 353-356).

Mrtyu² = Sūrya (the sun): III, 146.—Do.³ = Īiva (1000 names¹).

Mrtyu⁴ ("Death"), fem. § 594 (Akampana): Nārada said to Akampana: In the beginning the Grandsire Brahman created all creatures. As the creation bore no sign of decay, he began to think about the destruction of the universe. Failing to find any means of destruction, he became angry, and in consequence of his anger a fire sprang from the apertures of his body (khebhyaḥ) and destroyed all creatures. Then Īiva (the lord of all the wanderers at night) appealed to Brahman (the greatest of ascetics), who said, "Thou hast been born out of our wish" (kāmat) (VII, 52), and that the Earth, afflicted with the heavy weight of creatures, had asked him to destroy them. Īiva, saying that he had been appointed by Brahman the protector of creatures, prevailed upon Brahman to keep his wrath within his own inner self and extinguish the fire. Then Brahman expounded the doctrine of pravṛtti and nivṛtti. From his organs of sense (gobhyaḥ, cf. khebhyaḥ in a parallel passage, XII, 9179) then issued a female who was dark, etc., and set out for the southern quarter; Brahman called her Death (Mrtyu) and told her to slay the creatures. She wept, but Brahman caught her tears with his two hands and implored her (VII, 53)—who wished to go to the hermitage of Dhenuka to perform austerities—to slay the creatures. Soon Brahman smiled, the creatures continued to live as before, and Mrtyu proceeded to Dhenuka, where she practised austere vows during twenty-one times ten billions of years, and then she wandered 10,000 billions of years with the creatures. Next she repaired to Nanda and there passed 8,000 years, and became purified from all her sins. Then she went to Kauṣiki, where she lived upon air and water only. Then she repaired to Pañcagangā and next to Vetasaka (C. Cō), then to the Gangā and thence to Meru, motionless and suspending her life-breaths. Thence to the top of Himavat (where the gods had performed sacrifices) for a billion of years standing on the toe only of her feet. Then to Pushkara, and Gokarna, and Naimisha, and Malaya, with steady devotion to the Grandsire without acknowledging any other god. Brahman was gratified with her and said that in slaying the creatures she should be without sin; Yama and the diseases should become her helpmates. She prevailed upon him that the passions, covetousness, etc., should tear the bodies of the creatures before she slew them. Her tears which were in his hands should become diseases springing from the creatures themselves and kill men; she should be the virtue of living creatures and the goddess of this virtue. Sin would slay those who were of wicked behaviour; "it will be thy work to sink them in their sins that are wicked." Nārada further expounded the nature of death and told Akampana not to grieve for his dead son: VII, 53, 2068, 2070 (kamalaloana); 54, (2074), 2082, 2088, 2101, 2105, 2112, †2117, †2118, †2122 (devasṛṣṭā), †2123 (daṇḍapāniḥ).—§ 595 (Abhimanyuvadhāp.): VII, 55, 2134 (°samutpattim, all. to § 594); 71, 2471 (sambhavo M°oh, do.).—§ 678b (Mrtyu-Prajāpatisamv.): XII, 258, 9182, 9185;

Mudgala, a rshi. § 391 (Rshyaçrṅga): III, 113, 10093 (Nārāyaṇivendrasenā, i.e. the wife of M, babhāra caçyā nityam M°āya).—§ 520 (Vrihidraupikap.): III, 260, 15404.—§ 520 (cf. Vrihidraupikap.): Vyāsa said: There lived in Kurukshetra a virtuous sage named Mudgala, who lived by picking up ears of corn and grain, collecting a drona of corn during one fortnight and eating it together with his son and wife the other fortnight; yet he celebrated the sattra called iṣṭikṛta and the darçā- and paurṇamāsā-sacrifices, where Indra himself and the gods partook of the food offered, and entertained his guests with food, for the remainder of the drona of corn increased as soon as a guest appeared, so that hundreds of brahmins were fed with it; he lived himself on the food that remained after the gods and the guests had eaten. Having heard of M, Durvasas, naked and frantic, came to him uttering insulting words, and during six seasons ate up all his food, without perceiving any agitation in M's heart. Durvasas then told M. that in reward he should go to heaven even in his own body. Immediately a celestial messenger (devadūta) appeared upon a chariot yoked with swans and cranes, etc., and invited M. to ascend it. M. first asked the devadūta to tell him about the advantages and disadvantages of heaven (III, 260). The devadūta then described heaven (Svarga) (atheists and untruthful persons and those who have not practised ascetic austerities and those who have not performed great sacrifices cannot repair thither), with its advantages: myriads of beautiful worlds owned by the gods, the Sādhyas, the Viçve, the maharshis, the Yamas, the Dhūmas, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarases; Meru extending over 33,000 yojanas; the gardens of the celestials; Nandana, etc.; no grief, etc., no sweat, stench, excreta, nor urine, nor dust; the foremost regions are the regions of Brahman (Brāhmaṇḍ . . . lokah); thither repair sanctified rshis and there dwell the Rbhus, the gods of the gods themselves, who suffer no pangs from women, do not possess wealth, etc., do not subsist on oblations nor amṛta, and cannot be perceived by the senses, nor do they change at the revolution of a kalpa; for them there is neither ecstasy, nor joy, nor happiness, nor misery, etc.; they are thirty-three in number, to their regions repair wise men after having observed excellent vows, and also M. had acquired that success by his charity. Its disadvantages: while roaping the fruit of his acts a person cannot be engaged in any others, for this world is one of acts, the other one of fruition; after one has entirely exhausted his merit, he is subject to fall; he is then stupefied and agitated by emotions, and when the garlands of those who are to fall fade away, fear invades their hearts; but by reason of their merits they take birth among men, and then they attain to high fortune and happiness, while, if one cannot acquire knowledge here, he comes by an inferior birth. As M. did not desire to go to heaven, but asked a region where people have not to lament nor to be pained nor agitated, the devadūta described to him the supreme seat of Vishnu, which is called the highest Brāhmaṇ and lies above the abode of Brahman; thither only those who are free from selfishness, etc., and those who are given to contemplation and yoga, can repair. Then M. bade farewell to the devadūta, and being always engaged in meditation, etc., he at last attained to that supreme state of perfection (jagāma çivratām siddhiṃ parām nirvāṇalakṣaṇām). "Therefore," Vyāsa continued, "you also, O son of Kunti, ought not to grieve; after the thirteenth year you will get back your kingdom." Having said this Vyāsa returned to his hermitage to practise austerities (III, 261): III, 260, 15407, 15415, 15418, 15420, 15427, 15434; 261, 15443, 15448, 15469, 15476, (15481).—§ 677 (Mokshadh.): XII, 235, 8606 (Çatadyumna went to heaven after having given a mansion to M).—§ 721b (Viçvāmitrop.): XIII, 4β, 250 (the same?, son of Viçvāmitra). [Nahushopākhyāna] ("the episode relating to Nahusha").

§ 755b (Ānuṣāsanik.): Nahusha, having acquired the sovereignty of heaven, performed both human and celestial acts, for instance bali and offering of incense and of light, etc.; and although he had become the chief of the gods, he yet worshipped the gods as in days of yore. But then he was filled with pride in consequence of the boon he had received from all the gods, and he ceased to perform religious actions; for a very long time he used to employ the Ṛ. by turns as the bearers of his vehicles; but in consequence of his abstention from religious acts his energy began to diminish; when it was Agastya's turn to carry the vehicle, Bhṛgu came to the hermitage of Agastya (Maitrāvaruṇī), and when the latter, mentioning Brahmān's boon to Nahusha (that whoever would come within the range of his eyesight would, deprived of all energy, be within his sway), and that Brahmān had given him amṛta to drink, despaired of being able to curse him, Bhṛgu said that he had come at the command of Brahmān, and that he would curse Nahusha to be a snake, when he insulted Agastya by a kick, and this very day he would hurl him down and re-establish Indra. Agastya became highly gratified (XIII, 99). Asked by Yudhisṭhira, Bhishma continued [referring to and developing the beginning of XIII, 99: Nahusha's sacrificial rites and presents were obstructed by Rā.]: Nahusha ordered Ṛ. Agastya to carry the vehicle from the banks of Sarasvatī. Bhṛgu, telling Agastya to close his eyes, had entered the matted locks of Agastya, taking care not to cast his eyes upon Nahusha. Nahusha urged Agastya on with his goad and then struck him on the head with his left foot. Then Nahusha was cursed by Bhṛgu and transformed into a snake, but, in consequence of his gifts, etc., he retained his memory, and, assisted by Agastya, pacified Bhṛgu, who said that Yudhisṭhira would rescue him, and then went to the abode of Brahmān and informed him, while Agastya returned to his own hermitage. Brahmān once more installed (caused the gods to instal) Indra in the sovereignty of heaven. "Thou hast, O king, rescued Nahusha from Bhṛgu's curse; he ascended to the abode of Brahmān before thy eyes; in consequence of the merits he had acquired through acts of the kind I have mentioned, he succeeded in once more regaining his lost position. Hence, when evening comes, persons leading the domestic mode of life, should give lamps" (XIII, 100).

Nakuladāyāda = Çatānika, q.v.

Nakulākhyāna ("the narrative of the mungoose"). § 11 (Purvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 609.—§ 786b (Anugītāparvan): At the conclusion of Yudhisṭhira's horse-sacrifice, after everybody had been gratified, a blue-eyed mungoose, with one side of its body changed into gold, came and said, in voice as loud and deep as thunder, that this great sacrifice was not equal to a prastha of powdered barley given away by a liberal brahman of Kurukshetra, who was observing the uñcha- (or the pigeon-)vow. Asked by the brahman the mungoose related: The brahman named lived with his wife, son, and daughter-in-law, and practised penances; he used to eat every day at the sixth division: during a famine he had nothing to eat day after day; one day in the month of Jyāishṭha, while the sun was in the meridian, he was picking up grains of corn, but got nothing; one day, after the sixth division had come, he obtained a prastha of barley, which they reduced to powder for making saktu; having finished their recitations and libations, etc., they divided the powdered barley among themselves, so that each got a kuḍara; then came a guest, who ate all the portions, the wife, son, and daughter-in-law with difficulty prevailing upon the brahman to give their portions as well. The guest turned out to be Dharma; flowers were rained down from heaven; D.-r, D., G., Devadūtas, etc., and B.-r. standing in vimānas and dwelling in Brahmaloka were struck with wonder; "I have been rescued, and others who have not yet come (anāgatāḥ) have been rescued for countless yugas; he that gives away 100 having 1,000, 10 having 100, and a handful of water having no wealth, are equal in merit," citing Rantidara (e), Nrga (d), and Çibi Auçinara; "thou hast conquered Brahmaloka." The brahman, with his wife, son, and daughter-in-law, proceeded to heaven on a celestial chariot. The mungoose continued: "I came out of my hole, and by the contact with the powder of barley, etc., my head and half of my body became gold; in order to convert the rest of my body into gold I repeatedly repair to the hermitages of ascetics and to the sacrifices of kings; I came hither with high hopes, but I have not been made into gold." Then the mungoose disappeared (XIV, 90).—That mungoose was Dharma, who having injured Jama-dagni (f) had been cursed by the Pitṛs, but became freed from the curse by disparaging himself in the form of Yudhisṭhira (XIV, 92).

Nalopākhyāna ("the episode relating to Nala"), i.e. Nalopākhyānaparvan.—§ 10 (Parvasaṅgr.): I, 2, 321.—§ 11 (do.): I, 2, 436.

[Nalopākhyānaparvan(°va)] ("the episode relating to Nala," the 35th of the minor parvas of the Mahābhārata; cf. Nalopākhyāna).—§ 343: One day, when the Pāṇḍavas were grieving for Arjuna, Bhīma asked Yudhishtira to permit him to go and slay Duryodhana, interpreting the time to be complete ("as in the Veda a day is often equivalent to a year, when passed in suffering") (kṛcchrataḥ), but he did not prevail upon Yudhishtira. While they were conversing the great rishi Bhṛhadāçva came before them, and, asked by Yudhishtira if there was on earth a king more unfortunate than himself, he said that he would narrate a history of a prince more miserable than Yudhishtira, viz. Nala (the son of the Nishadha king Virasena), who, defeated deceitfully by Pushkara (the brother of Nala, v. 2296), dwelt in the woods with his spouse, having neither slaves nor chariots nor brothers nor friends with him (III, 52).—§ 344: Bhṛhadāçva said: The Nishadha king Nala, the son of Virasena, was above all kings, etc., and fond of dice.

The Vidarbha king Bhīma was granted by the Brahmarshi Dama a daughter, Damayanti, and three excellent sons, Dama, Dānta, and Damana. Both Nala and Damayanti had not their equals in beauty, and, continually hearing of each other's virtues, they conceived attachment to each other, though they had never seen each other. Once Nala in his garden saw a number of golden-winged swans and caught one of them, but let it loose, as it promised to speak well of him before Damayanti. The swans having arrived at the Vidarbha country, the one who had been caught by Nala led Damayanti to a secluded spot and fulfilled its mission. Damayanti caused it to speak to Nala of her (III, 53).—§ 345: As Damayanti became sick of love, her father invited all the kings to her svayamvara. At this time the rahis of the gods Nārada and Parvata, having arrived in course of their wanderings at the regions of Indra, told him that the kings did not now come to him because they were intent on the svayamvara of Damayanti. Hearing this, the Lokapālas set out on their vehicles for the svayamvara, but seeing Nala on the way and filled with astonishment at his beauty, they left their chariots in the sky and asked Nala to be their messenger (III, 54). Nala promised to do so, but when Indra told him to go to Damayanti and tell her that Indra, Agni, Varuṇa, and Yama desired her to choose one of them for her lord, he asked them to spare him as he had come with the same object; but, as they insisted that he should stand by his promise, he by their power entered without being perceived by the guardians into the apartments of Damayanti, and, saying his name, fulfilled his mission (III, 55). Damayanti declared that if she did not become the wife of Nala himself she would resort to poison, or fire, or water, or the rope. Nala advised her to choose one of the gods, maintaining that having come in a different mission he dared not seek his own interest. Damayanti then told him to come to her svayamvara in company with the gods, then she would choose him, at which no blame would be his, and Nala returned to the Lokapālas and told them what had happened (III, 56). At the sacred hour of the holy lunar day of the auspicious season Bhīma summoned the kings to the svayamvara, and that assembly of kings resembled the Bhugaratī swarming with Nāgas. Damayanti, beholding five persons all alike in appearance, and recollecting the marks of the celestials, of which she had heard from old people, was unable to distinguish which of them was Nala. Filled with grief, she then decided upon seeking the protection of the gods themselves, and prevailed upon them that they assumed their true shapes. Thereupon she beheld the gods unmoistened with perspiration, with unwinking eyes and unfading garlands, not stained with dust, and staying without touching the ground, while Nala was revealed by his shadow, his fading garlands, and by his being stained with dust and sweat, and resting on the ground with winking eyes. She then chose Nala, seizing the hem of his garment and placing a floral wreath round his neck. Nala promised Damayanti that he would remain hers as long as he lived, and she spoke words of like import to him. The Lokapālas bestowed such a couple of boons on Nala: Indra, that he should be able to behold his divine nature in sacrifices, and blessed regions thereafter (gatim anuttamām); Agni, his own presence wherever he wished and regions as bright as himself; Yama, subtle taste in food and pre-eminence in virtue; Varuṇa, water wherever he desired and garlands of celestial fragrance.

Then the gods went to heaven and the kings returned home. Nala, after the wedding, stayed there for a time, returned home, ruled righteously, and celebrated the horse-sacrifice, etc. He begat the son Indrasena and the daughter Indrasena upon Damayanti (III, 57).—§ 346: When the Lokapālas were returning they met Dvāpara with Kali going to the svayamvara, and Indra told Kali that Damayanti had already chosen Nala. As Kali threatened to avenge himself he was rebuked by the Lokapālas, as Nala had studied the four Vedas with the Ākhyāna as the fifth, etc. When the gods had gone to heaven, Kali said that he would take possession of Nala and deprive him of his kingdom, and asked Dvāpara to enter the dice (III, 58). Kali then went to the country of the Nishadhas and always watched for an opportunity. At last, in the twelfth year, when Nala, after answering a call of nature, touching water had said his twilight prayers without having washed his feet, Kali entered his person. Then Kali becoming Vṛsha ("vṛsho gavām," the principal die, Nil.) (PCR. thinks we ought to read that "Dvāpara also approached Pushkara becoming Vṛsha") prevailed upon Pushkara, that he challenged Nala to a match of dice in order to acquire his kingdom. Nala and Pushkara gambled together for many months, Nala being always worsted; no one amongst his friends could succeed in dissuading him from the play; at last they came in a body, which was told by the sūta to Damayanti, who in vain represented it to Nala; he uttered not a word in reply (III, 59). Seeing that Nala had lost everything, Damayanti told her nurse and maidservant Brhatsenā to summon the councillors in the name of Nala and tell them what had been lost; the councillors approached Nala, and Damayanti informed him that the citizens had come again in a body, but he regarded her not. She then caused Brhatsenā to summon the sūta Vārshneya, who at her request yoked Nala's favourite horses and brought her two children to Kuṇḍina (the city of Bhīma, Nil.). There he left the children, the chariot, and the horses, and went to Ayodhyā, where he entered the service of king Rūpama (the king of Kośala, v. 2877) as a charioteer (III, 60).—§ 347: At last, when Pushkara had won all Nala's wealth and his kingdom, he proposed to him to stake Damayanti. But Nala, feeling as if his heart would burst and gazing at Pushkara in anguish without speaking a word, took all the ornaments off his body, and attired in a single piece of cloth left the city accompanied by Damayanti. They stayed for three nights in the outskirts of the city, living on water alone. Nobody showed him hospitable regards, as Pushkara had proclaimed through the city that he that should show any attention to Nala would be put to death. After many days Nala saw some birds of golden hue and covered them with his cloth in order to catch them, but they rose up to the sky taking away that garment of his, and then told him they were the dice that had come hither to take away even his cloth. Nala proposed to Damayanti to leave him, pointing out to her the roads to Aranti, Ākharat, Vindhya, Payoshni, Vidarbha, Kośala (C. Kośalāṃ, B. and Bopp Kośalān), and the south. But she would not leave him, but suggested that they should go to Vidarbha (III, 61). Nala refused to appear before Bhīma in his state of misery. They went on attired in the same piece of cloth. Once when Damayanti had fallen into a profound slumber in a shed for travellers (sabha), Nala, influenced by Kali, resolved upon deserting Damayanti, as separated from him

she might perchance wander to her relatives. With a sword that he found near the shed he cut off one half of the cloth and throwing the instrument away departed, having first returned again and again, dragged away by Kali, but drawn back by love (III, 62). When Damayanti awoke, she lamented and cursed the being through whose imprecation Nala suffered woe, saying that it should lead a still more miserable life. Thereupon, wandering on, she was seized by a gigantic serpent and rescued by a hunter: as the hunter, after comforting her, tried to force her to love him, he was cursed by her and fell down lifeless upon the ground (III, 63). Description of the forest, Damayanti's lamentations. She went in a northerly direction for three days and nights, then she came to an asylum of ascetics, who told her that she should again become happy together with Nala. Then the asylum disappeared. Sometime afterwards, having proceeded a long way, she met with a body of merchants landing on the banks of a river; its leader was Çuci (v. 2529, "so help us now, Mañibhadra, the king of Yakshas"), and it was bound for the city of the Cedi king Subāhu (III, 64). Damayanti followed the caravan. Once, at midnight, the caravan was destroyed by wild elephants and many men were trodden to death, which some ascribed to their not having worshipped Mañibhadra or Tuigrarāṇa, the kings of Yakshas, others to their having received Damayanti, whom they thought to be a Rākshasi or Piṣāca or Yaksha woman, and resolved upon killing her when they saw her. Hearing this Damayanti fled. The next day the remnant of the caravan left the place. Damayanti, with the brahmins that had survived the slaughter of the caravan, came towards evening to the city of the Cedi king Subāhu. The boys began to follow her; when she came before the palace of the king, the queen-mother let the nurse take her in. Damayanti agreed to stay there on the conditions that she should not eat remnants, not wash anyone's feet, nor speak with other men, but be protected against all aspirations. The queen gave her as a sairindhri to her daughter Sunandā (III, 65).—§ 348: Nala, having deserted Damayanti, saw a conflagration in the forest and therefrom heard a voice calling him by name and saw the Nāga Karkoṭaka, who, unable to stir, told him that he had deceived the great ṛshi Nārada and been cursed by him with the words: "Stay thou here immobile until Nala takes thee hence, then thou shalt be freed from my curse," and asked him to deliver him and promised to instruct him in respect of his welfare. The snake then became as small as a thumb, and Nala taking him up went to a spot free from fire. Karkoṭaka let him proceed yet counting his steps, and bit him at the tenth step (adaṣaḍ daṣame pade) (see Nil. and PCR.). Then the form of Nala was changed, in order that people might not recognize him, and Karkoṭaka assumed his own form, and said that Kali dwelling in Nala should be tortured by his venom, and that Nala should have no fear from animals with fangs, from enemies, and from men versed in the Veda (brhmanavidbhyah), and told him to go to Ayodhyā and present himself as a sūta Bāhuka before Rtuparna (of the race of Ikshvāku), who would give Nala his skill in dice (akṣahṛdaya) in exchange for Nala's knowledge of horses (aśvahrdaya), and when he had become an adept at dice he should have prosperity and meet with his wife and children and regain his kingdom. The Nāga king then gave Nala two pieces of celestial cloth, saying that when he desired to get back his own form he should remember him and wear this garment. Then he disappeared (III, 66).—§ 349: On the tenth day Nala entered the city of Rtuparna; he approached the king and named himself Bāhuka, and said that he surpassed everybody in managing steeds and might be consulted in matters of difficulty (arthakṛtsnashu) and affairs of skill (naipūṇeshu), and that he was versed in the art of cooking. Then he was appointed superintendent of Rtuparna's horses on a pay of 10,000, and Vārshneya and Jivala should be under his direction. Every evening he recited the śloka, "Where lies that helpless one (tapasvini) afflicted with hunger and thirst and worn with toil (śrāntā), or upon whom does she now wait (upatiśṭhātī)?" Once Jivala asked him who she was, and Nala related to him the main features of his story without naming her or himself (III, 67).—§ 350: Bhīma sent out brahmins in all directions to search for Nala and Damayanti, promising 1,000 kine, etc., to him that should find them. At length the brahmin Sudeva, the friend of Damayanti's brother, recognized Damayanti in the city of the Cedi, seated with Sunandā during the time of the king's prayers (pūnyāhacācane rājñah), and told her who he was and that her relatives and children were well. Beholding Damayanti weeping and conversing in private with Sudeva, Sunandā caused her mother to question Sudeva (III, 68). Sudeva told the story of Damayanti, and that he had recognized her by a mole between her eyebrows, which was now almost covered with dust as her whole body. Then Sunandā washed away the dust and the queen-mother recognized her by the mole as the daughter of her sister, as she and Damayanti's mother were both daughters of the Daśārṇa king Sudāman, and she herself had been bestowed on Vṛabāhu and her sister on Bhīma; she had witnessed Damayanti's birth in the palace of her father in the Daśārṇa country. At her own request Damayanti was brought in a litter carried by men and protected by a large escort to the city of Bhīma, and was received with respect and worshipped the gods and brahmins. Bhīma gave unto Sudeva 1,000 kine, etc. The next day Damayanti let her mother cause Bhīma to send brahmins out in all directions to seek for Nala. Damayanti ordered them everywhere to recite the ślokas: "O beloved gambler, where hast thou gone, cutting off half of my garment," etc., but to take care that no one knew that it was on her command (III, 69).—§ 351: After a long time the brahmin Parṇada told that he had in Ayodhyā visited Bhāṅgāsuri (i.e. Rtuparna), and that Bāhuka had been affected by hearing his śloka, and had said to him: "Chaste women, though overtaken by calamity, yet protect themselves," etc. Damayanti then thanked Parṇada and promised him great wealth and consulted with her mother, and, without Bhīma's knowing it, sent Sudeva, who told Rtuparna that to-morrow Damayanti would hold another śrayamcara (III, 70). When ordered by Rtuparna to conduct him to the śrayamcara of Damayanti, Bāhuka felt his heart bursting with grief, but promised to go there in a single day; he yoked four horses born in Sindhu (description of their marks), made Vārshneya sit on the chariot, and set out with so great speed that Vārshneya thought he must be Mātali or Çālihotra, who had taken a human shape, or Nala (III, 71).—§ 352: As the chariot was coursing thus, Rtuparna lost his upper garment, and Nala declared that it was impossible to recover it, as they had already travelled one yojana thence. As Rtuparna rightly indicated the number of fruits of a vibhītaka-tree (Terminalia bellerica), and said he was skilled in dice as in numbers, Nala prevailed upon him to teach him the science and in future receive instead his science of horses. Then Kali came out from the body of Nala, vomiting the poison of Karkoṣaka, and assumed his own shape, as the fire of Damayanti's curse had left him, but remained invisible to others except Nala. Kali prevailed upon Nala that he should not curse him, promising that those men who would attentively recite his history should be free from fear of him, and entered the vibhītaka-tree till Nala had gone far away. Then Kali returned to his abode. From the touch of Kali the vibhītaka-tree from that hour fell into disrepute. Nala now became free from calamity, though he did not assume his original form (III, 72) — § 353: At night they arrived at Kuṇḍina, having passed 100 yojanas. The steeds of Nala that were in that city, and peacocks and elephants and Damayanti recognized the sound of Nala's chariot; Damayanti ascended the terrace with the desire of seeing Nala. The Koçala king (Rtuparna) wondered, as he did not hear any talk of the svayamvara, etc., and Bhīma thought that he had come simply to pay his respects. When Rtuparna had gone to his appointed quarters with Vārahṇeya, and Bāhuka, having tended the horses, was sitting at the side of the chariot, Damayanti sent a female messenger in search of Nala (III, 73). The female messenger Keçinī asked Bāhuka about Vārahṇeya and himself; he said that Vārahṇeya was the charioteer of Nala, that nobody knew Nala except Nala himself and his wife, as he did not discover his marks of identity anywhere, and that he himself was the charioteer and cook of king Rtuparna; at last she repeated the śloka of Parmāda: "O beloved gambler," etc., and said that Damayanti wished again to hear the reply he had given Parmāda; then Bāhuka, weeping, said: "Chaste women, though overtaken by calamity," etc., and Keçinī went to Damayanti and acquainted her with everything (III, 74). Damayanti again sent Keçinī to stay in silence at Bāhuka's side and mark his conduct; she related that low passages grew in height so that he might pass through them easily, that when he approached narrow holes opened wide, that only by his looking upon them the vessels became filled with water, that when he held a handful of grass in the sun the fire blazed up all of a sudden, that he touched fire and was not hurt, that water falling at his will flowed in a stream, and that flowers pressed with his hands became gay and more fragrant than before. Damayanti then caused Keçinī without Bāhuka's knowledge to bring her some meat that had been boiled and dressed by him, from the kitchen, and recognized the taste. She then sent her two children with Keçinī. Bāhuka embraced them crying aloud, saying they were like his own children, and sent Keçinī away lest people might think "evil" (III, 75). Having obtained the consent both of her father and mother, Damayanti caused Nala to be brought to her apartments; it came to an explication; Damayanti declared that she had feigned to hold a second svayamvara because no one except Nala could in one day manage 100 yojanas with horses, and swore by the Air, Sun, and Moon ("who dwells as a witness within every creature," v. 2989), who had been her protector for these three years, and Vāyu bore witness to the truth of her words. Then a floral shower fell there, and the celestial kettledrum began to play. Nala then wore the garment he had received from the serpent king and regained his old form. Thus Nala in the fourth year was reunited with his wife (III, 76). The next day they presented themselves before Bhīma. The citizens were in great joy and adorned (arcitāni) the temples (devatāyatanāni), etc. Rtuparna asked Nala's forgiveness, and Nala also asked Rtuparna's forgiveness, and made over to him his horse-lore, having obtained from him the mystery of dice. Then Rtuparna went away to his own city, employing another person as his charioteer (III, 77).—§ 354: Having dwelt for a month at Kuṇḍina, Nala set out for the Nishadha country with a single white chariot, sixteen elephants, fifty horses, and 600 infantry, and proposed to Pushkara that they should gamble again, as Nala had won great wealth; the stake should be Damayanti, wealth and kingdom, and their lives; if not, he proposed a single combat. Pushkara, hoping to win Damayanti, whom he loved, gladly consented to gamble, and lost at a single throw. Nala, declaring that it was Kali who had done it all, forgave his brother and granted him his portion, and after a month let him go to his own town. All the citizens and subjects rejoiced at Nala's return (III, 78). Then Nala with a large force brought Damayanti and his children home, and passed his days in joy and performed numerous sacrifices with abundant gifts to brahmins.—§ 355: "So thou also, O Yudhishtira, wilt blaze forth in effulgence soon. They that will repeatedly recite this history of Nala and they that will hear it recited will never be touched by adversity." As Yudhishtira feared that some one skilled in dice might summon him, Brhadāçva taught him the science of dice (akṣahṛdaya) and then went to Açvaçiras for a bath. Yudhishtira then learnt from brahmins and ascetics from various directions that Arjuna was still engaged in ascetic penances, and Yudhishtira grieved for him (III, 79).

[Nāradaḡamanaparvan] ("the section containing the arrival of Nārada," the ninety-seventh of the minor parvas of Mahābhārata; cf. Nāradaḡamana). — § 792: Vaiçampāyana said: Two years after their return from the retreat of Dhṛtarāṣṭra the Pāṇḍavas were visited by D.-p. Nārada. Yudhiṣṭhira inquired after Dhṛtarāṣṭra, etc. Nārada said: After thy return from Kurukṣetra, Dhṛtarāṣṭra proceeded towards Gaṅgādvāra with the sacrificial fire and Gāndhārī, Kuntī, Sañjaya, and all the yājñakas. They themselves took to severe austerities (description), while the sacred fire was duly worshipped by the yājñakas. They wandered about, Sañjaya acting as a guide, Pṛthā becoming the eye of Gāndhārī. Once Dhṛtarāṣṭra bathed in the Gaṅgā, and was returning to his retreat. A violent forest conflagration set in; Dhṛtarāṣṭra dismissed Sañjaya and sat down, facing the east, with Gāndhārī and Kuntī; they concentrated their soul, and were burnt by the conflagration. Sañjaya escaped and was seen by me (Nārada) on the banks of the Gaṅgā in the midst of ascetics; he bade them farewell and started for Himarāt. In the course of my wanderings I saw the three bodies. The ascetics, from whom I heard all the details, did not at all grieve for them. Vaiçampāyana said: The Pāṇḍavas and the citizens felt great grief (XV, 37). Yudhiṣṭhira lamented (a) (XV, 38). Nārada comforted Yudhiṣṭhira by informing him of the sacred character of the fire that had burnt Dhṛtarāṣṭra and the two queens. When Dhṛtarāṣṭra entered the woods he caused his sacrificial fires to be duly ignited; having performed his sacred rites with them he abandoned them all; then the Yājñakas had left them in a solitary part of the wood and gone away; the fires thus left to themselves produced a general conflagration; "this is what I have heard from the ascetics on the Gaṅgā."

Vaiçampāyana said: Headed by Yuyutu the Pāṇḍavas and the citizens all proceeded to the Gaṅgā in order to offer oblations of water to the deceased king and queens. Then they came back, taking up their residence outside the city. Yudhiṣṭhira sent a number of men to the retreat to cremate the remains of his uncle, aunt, and mother in due form. On the twelfth day he performed the śrāddhas with gifts in abundance (description). Then all returned to Hastinapura. The great R. Nārada, having comforted Yudhiṣṭhira, went away. Dhṛtarāṣṭra had passed three years in the forest and fifteen years in the city. Yudhiṣṭhira was plunged in grief [*; not in B.] (XV, 39).

[Nārada-Parvatopākhyāna(m)] ("the episode relating to Nārada and Parvata"). § 633b (Rājadh.): R. Nārada and his sister's son Parvata had in days of old left heaven for a pleasant ramble on earth in order to taste clarified butter and rice. They wandered under a compact of telling each other their inmost thoughts. They arrived at the court of Srījaya (Çvāitya). Nārada was taken with the charms of Srījaya's daughter Sukumārī; but shamefulness prevented him from disclosing his love to Parvata, who then cursed him for his reticence, saying that Sukumārī should become his wife, but then she and every man should behold him in the shape of an ape. Nārada cursed Parvata in return, saying that he should not succeed in proceeding to heaven. Parvata began to wander over the earth. Sukumārī beheld Nārada as an ape, but devoted herself entirely to him, and did not desire any D., Mu., or Y. for a husband. Nārada and Parvata, after some time, became reconciled and withdrew their mutual curses. Sukumārī fled, thinking Nārada to be somebody else, but was informed by Parvata. Parvata proceeded to heaven and Nārada to his home. Kṛṣṇa continued: "R. Nārada is here; he will tell thee everything that happened" (XII, 30).

Nara-Nārāyanau. §561d (Yānasandhip.): Once Bṛhaspati and Uśanas went to Brahmān, and also the Maruts with Indra, the Vasus with Agni, the Ādityas, the Sādhyas, the seven ṛṣhis (saptarṣayaḥ), the Gandharvas Viśrāvasu, the ganas of Apsarasas, and having bowed down to Brahmān they sat around him. Just then the two ancient deities (pūrvadevau), the Ṛṣhis Nara and Nārāyaṇa, left the place. Bṛhaspati said to Brahmān: "Who are these two that leave the place without worshipping thee?" Brahmān said that they were Nara and Nārāyaṇa who had come from the world of men to the world of Brahmān (so Nīl.); "worshipped by the gods and the Gandharvas they exist only for the destruction of the Asuras." Indra went to the spot where those two were practising austerities, accompanied by all the gods headed by Bṛhaspati. At that time the gods had been very much alarmed in consequence of a war with the Asuras. Indra obtained the boon that Nara and Nārāyaṇa (i.e. Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa) assisted him in the battle (cf. Arjuna). Both of them, by their acts, enjoy numerous eternal and celestial regions, and are repeatedly born in the times of war. Even this is what Nārada, conversant with the Vedas, had said to the Vṛṣṇis.

For some purpose that creator of the universe took his birth as the son of Dharma. On Himavat he underwent austerities for 66,000 years (description) and then for twice that period, and thus he became Brāhman (brahmabhūtaḥ) and beheld the supreme deity Čiva (c). The lotus-eyed N. recited a hymn to Mahādeva (i.e. Čiva) (given in full) (†). Čiva then granted him boons, that neither gods nor the Asuras; the mahoragas, the Piçācas, the Gandharvas, men, the Rākṣasas, the birds, the Nāgas, nor any creatures in the universe should ever be able to withstand his prowess, "thou shalt be superior to myself if thou ever goest to battle with me." Even that god then walked over the earth (as Kṛṣṇa Vāsudeva), beguiling the universe by his illusive power. From the austerities of N. was born a great muni Nara, who was equal to N. himself. Arjuna was none else than that Nara. [Nārāyaṇāstramokshaparvan(°va)] ("the section including the hurling of the Nārāyaṇa weapon"), the 78th of the minor parvas of the Mhbh. § 603. THE LAST PART OF THE 15TH DAY. After the fall of Droṇa, the Kurus, even Duryodhana, etc. (a), fled away, Kṛtavarman with the remnant of his Bhoja troops, etc. (β), Suśarman with the remnant of the Saṃśaptakas. Only Aṣvatthāman did not flee: Aṣvatthāman & Çikhaṇḍin, etc. (γ). Aṣvatthāman asked Duryodhana why the troops were fleeing away, even Karna's troops; Duryodhana caused Kṛpa to inform Aṣvatthāman of the truth (δ), at which Aṣvatthāman was filled with rage (VII, 193). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sañjaya what Aṣvatthāman said (ε), he who knew the weapons of men and Vāruṇa, etc. (ζ) (VII, 194). Sañjaya related: Aṣvatthāman complained before Duryodhana that his father has been killed (η), and vowed to destroy the Pāṇḍavas and the Pāṇḍaras; neither D., nor G., As., U., Rā., etc., were able to vanquish him; there were none equal to him and Arjuna in knowledge of weapons; he had a weapon (the Nārāyaṇa weapon) that neither Arjuna, etc. (θ) knew, given by Nārāyaṇa to his father as a boon, with the promise that no man should ever be his equal in battle: only, this weapon must never be used in haste, etc., and never be hurled upon persons that abandon their chariots or weapons in battle, etc.; with this he would rout and slay the Pāṇḍaras, etc. (ι). The Kuru army rallied; many blew their conches, etc.; the Pāṇḍaras took counsel of one another; Aṣvatthāman touched water and invoked the Nārāyaṇa weapon (VII, 195). Fierce omens in nature appeared. D., Dū., and G. became inspired with fear. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sañjaya what counsel was adopted by the Pāṇḍaras in order to protect Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna on seeing the retreating Kauravas once more advance to battle, rallied by Aṣvatthāman. Sañjaya related: Yudhishtira spoke about the matter to Arjuna (κ), fearing that it was Indra himself who was approaching for the sake of the Kauravas. Arjuna in reply described the prowess of Aṣvatthāman and the unrighteousness of the Pāṇḍaras in slaying Droṇa (λ); "all of us have passed the greater part of our lives; the days that remain to us are few; this exceedingly unrighteous act has stained that remnant"; "I did not interfere, as he was about to be slain; for this fault I have already sunk into hell, overcome with shame"

(VII, 196). Bhīmasena, reproaching Arjuna, vindicated the deed (μ); "I can, with my arrows, rout the united D. with Indra at their head, and As., U., and men." Then Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna spoke in justification of his conduct (ν) (VII, 197). Asked by Dhṛtarāṣṭra (ξ), Sañjaya related: All the other persons present remained silent; Arjuna, glancing obliquely towards Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, seemed to reproach him with tears and sighs; Yudhishtira, etc. (ο) stood ashamed; Sātyaki wrathfully rebuked Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna (π). Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna in reply taunted Sātyaki with the slaughter of Bhāriśravas (ρ). Sātyaki rushed towards Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna in order to slay him; Bhīma, urged by Kṛṣṇa, held him back; Sahadeva endeavoured to bring about a reconciliation (σ); Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna asked Bhīma to let him slay Sātyaki (τ); then he or Arjuna would slay the enemies. Kṛṣṇa and Yudhishtira restored peace with great difficulty, and all the warriors proceeded to battle (VII, 198). Aṣvatthāman caused a great carnage among the Pāṇḍava troops (description); before Duryodhana he repeated his vow (ν). Duryodhana rallied his troops. Aṣvatthāman invoked the Nārāyaṇa weapon (description). The Pāṇḍavas, etc. (φ), became exceedingly agitated. Yudhishtira, relying on Kṛṣṇa, advised Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna to flee away with his Pāṇḍavas, and Sātyaki with the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas; he and his brothers would ascend a funeral pile (χ). Kṛṣṇa prevailed upon the troops to lay down their weapons and alight from their chariots. Bhīmasena alone refused to do so, and dissuaded the others (ψ). Arjuna said that his vow was that the Gāṇḍīva should not be used against the Nārāyaṇa weapon, kine, and brahmins. Bhīma attacked Aṣvatthāman, but was overwhelmed by the energy of the Nārāyaṇa weapon (VII, 199). Arjuna covered Bhīmasena with the Vāruṇa weapon; Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, alighting from their chariot, proceeded on foot towards Bhīma and forcibly brought him down from his chariot, making him abandon his weapons. Then the Nārāyaṇa weapon became neutralized; all the quarters became clear, etc. The Pāṇḍava host stood arrayed once more. Duryodhana urged Aṣvatthāman to use the same weapon once more; Aṣvatthāman said that it could not be used twice; if brought back it would without doubt slay himself. Duryodhana then urged him to slay the enemies with other weapons. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked, what then came to pass (ω); Sañjaya related: Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna & Aṣvatthāman, who deprived Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna of his steeds, driver, and chariot; the Pāṇḍavas fled away. Sātyaki & Aṣvatthāman, who was worsted by him. Duryodhana, etc. (aa), & Sātyaki, who made them flee away deprived of their chariots. Aṣvatthāman (upon another chariot) & Sātyaki, who once more deprived him of his chariot and caused him to retreat; the Pāṇḍaras blew their conches, and Sātyaki slew 300 of Vṛṣasenā's division, etc. (ab). Aṣvatthāman (upon another chariot) & Sātyaki; Aṣvatthāman repeated his vow (ββ); Sātyaki was carried away by his driver. Aṣvatthāman & Dhr̥ṣṭadyumna, who was much afflicted; Arjuna, etc. (γγ), & Aṣvatthāman, who slew Sudarṣana (the Mālava king), Paurava (Bṛhatkshatra), and the young Cedi prince. Bhīma & Aṣvatthāman; Bhīma was carried away by his steeds; the Pāṇḍavas fled away (VII, 200). Arjuna (+ Kṛṣṇa) (rallying his troops) & Aṣvatthāman (+ the Kauravas); Arjuna addressed Aṣvatthāman in harsh words (ēē). Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Sañjaya about the cause of this, as Arjuna and Aṣvatthāman loved each other. Sañjaya said that it was in consequence of his grief (ee). Aṣvatthāman became angry with Arjuna and especially with Kṛṣṇa, touched water, and made use of the Āgneya weapon, from which dire omens in nature appeared, and a great slaughter in the Pāṇḍava army resulted; Rā. and P. uttered fierce cries, etc. (description). Arjuna invoked the Brāhma weapon: the darkness was dispelled, etc.; a full akṣauhīni of the Pāṇḍava troops had been killed; Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were unwounded; the Pāṇḍavas rejoiced, the Kauravas wondered, Açvatthāman was disconsolate, and ran away from the fight; he met Vyāsa, and asked him the reason; "neither As., nor G., P., Rā., U., Y., and birds, nor men can baffle this weapon." Vyāsa told him the story of Nārāyaṇa (b); Nara and Nārāyaṇa are Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa; even Açvatthāman has been born as a portion of Rudra, and was [in a former birth] endued with great wisdom, regarding the universe to consist only of Mahādeva, etc., and Çiva had granted him numerous boons, and he had, in every Yuga, adored the great god in his Phallic form. Kṛṣṇa had sprung from Rudra himself, and always worshipped him, regarding his Phallic emblem as the origin of the universe, and he viewed the identity of Brāhman with the universe; D., Si., and M.-r. adore Kṛṣṇa in order to attain to Mahādeva; Kṛṣṇa is the Creator of everything; the eternal Kṛṣṇa should be adored with sacrifices, etc. Açvatthāman bowed unto Rudra, regarded Kṛṣṇa as worthy of the highest regards, and became filled with delight, the marks whereof appeared on his body. Bowing to Vyāsa, he caused the army to be withdrawn, and so did also the Pāṇḍavas. Having fought for five days . . . , Droṇa repaired to Brahmaloka (VII, 201). Arjuna met with Vyāsa and inquired of him about the invisible person who aided him in the battle; Vyāsa said that it was Mahādeva himself, and recited a long enumeration of his attributes (qq); if Mahādeva becomes angry, neither D., nor As., G., Rā., even if they hide themselves in deep caves, can have peace. In days of yore Mahādeva destroyed the sacrifice of Dakṣa; the Sacrifice fled away, and D. and As. fell down and submitted to Mahādeva, the Nāgas and R. became agitated, etc.; Pashan was eating the puroḍaça: Çira tore out his teeth; the gods assigned to Rudra a substantial share in sacrifices; he then re-established the sacrifice. Then Vyāsa related the destruction of Tripura (d). He [Çira] is Rudra, etc. (u). Explanation of some of the names of Mahādeva (κκ). Blessings upon the reader, especially the readers of the Çatanudrīya (λλ) (VII, 202).

[Nārāyaṇīya(m)] ("the section treating of Nārāyaṇa"): § 717b (Mokṣadh.). Bhīṣma said: "I heard it from my father that in the Kṛta age, during the epoch of Manu Sṛāyambhuva, the eternal Nārāyaṇa, the Soul of the universe, took birth as the son of Dharma in a quadruple form: as Nara, Nārāyaṇa, Harī, and the Self-existent (Sṛāyambhuva!) Kṛṣṇa. Amongst them all, Nārāyaṇa and Nara practised the several austerities, repairing to the Himālayan hermitage Badarī and riding in their golden chariot (description; v. the note of PCR., p. 740). Nārada dropped down on Gandhamādāna from a summit of Meru and wandered over all the world, and at last repaired to Badarī at the hour of Nara's and Nārāyaṇa's performing their daily rites. He said to himself: this is truly the abode of that Being in whom are established all the worlds including D., As., G., K., and M.-U.; in this spot Kṛṣṇa and Harī dwelt formerly; what is that deity whom these two worship? who are these Pitṛs whom these two Pitṛs of all beings adore?" R. Nārada, bowing unto Mahādeva, praised Nārāyaṇa ("sung in the Vedas, Purāṇas, Āngas, and Upāṅgas"), and asked what god or Pitṛ he was sacrificing to. Nārāyaṇa said that about this topic nothing should be said, as it was an ancient mystery; but because of his devotion he instructed him about Kṣhetrajña, etc. The twenty-one Prajāpatīs: Brahmān, etc. (a) were first born, and obeyed the eternal law of the Supreme God (XII, 335). Nārada (Parameshthya) proceeded to Çetadvīpa ("White Island") to behold Nārāyaṇa in his original shape; by yoga he soared into the firmament, rested for a short while on a summit of Meru, then he directed his eyes towards the north-west, and north of the milky ocean he saw the large island Çetadvīpa, more than 32,000 yojanas from Meru; the inhabitants of that realm have no senses, etc. (description); they are white and free from every sin, etc. Yudhishtira asked for further information about this people. Bhīṣma related the story of Uparicara (c), "the essence of all narratives," which he had heard from his father (XII, 336-8). Arrived at Çetadvīpa, Nārada stood in yoga and hymned Nārāyaṇa (ç) [i.e. Mahāpurushastava] (XII, 339). Nārāyaṇa showed himself to Nārada, bearing all forms (viçvarūpadhṛk; enumeration), uttering with his mouths Gayatrī, om, and the Āraṇyaka, and the four Vedas; he mentioned Ekata, Dvita, and Trita, and instructed Nārada (η). Vāsudeva = Soul = Jīva = Çeṣa = Saṅkṣhaya (when he takes birth as Jīva) = Kṣhetrajña; > Sanatkumāra = Mind = Pradyumna; > the Creator = Anuruddha = Īçāna = Īçvara = Ahaṅkāra. "I am known as Puruṣa; without acts I am the 25th. Haranyagarbha, etc. (θ), are in me." Nārāyaṇa's boons to Brahmān in days of yore. "I am Kapila, etc. (i). Brahmān springs from Anuruddha's navel." The feats that Nārāyaṇa will perform (those that he will slay; his incarnations) (κ); "in the Tretā age I shall take birth as Rāma of Bhṛgu's race . . . ; in the twilight (sandhyāṃçe) between Tretā and Dvāpara I shall take birth as Rāma Dāçarathī; at that time Ekata and Dvita (in consequence of their injury to Trita) will have to take birth as apes; all those apes shall become my allies . . . ; in the period (sandhau) joining the Dvāpara and the Kālī I shall take birth in Mathurā in order to slay Kaṇva, and take up my residence in Kuçasthali [at] Dvārakā; I shall transplant Prāgyotisha to Dvārakā, and subjugate Mahāçvara and Mahāsena (i.e. Skanda), who will help Dā. Bāṇa (with 1,000 arms); . . . Brahmān himself never obtained a sight of me in this shape of mine, which thou hast seen to-day." Harī then disappeared; Nārada returned to Badarī, to behold Nara and Nārāyaṇa. This great Upanishad, consistent with the four Vedas and with Sāṅkhya-Yoga, and called Pāñcarātra, and recited by Nārāyaṇa himself, was repeated by Nārada in the abode of Brahmān. Yudhishtira asked: "Was not Brahmān acquainted with this wonderful narrative of the glory of Nārāyaṇa?" Bhīṣma said that it was only to R. in the abode of Brahmān that Nārada recited his narrative. The propagation of the narrative: R. > Sūrya > 66,000 R. in Sūrya's train, etc., > D. on Meru > Asita > the Pitṛs; "I heard it from my father Çantanu; it is a Purāṇa, and should not be communicated to anyone that is not a worshipper of Vāsudeva; it is really the essence of the hundreds of other narratives thou hast heard from me; in days of yore, D. and A., uniting together, churned the ocean for the amṛta; after the same manner, the brahmans in days of yore, uniting together, churned all the scriptures and raised this narrative." He who reads this becomes an inhabitant of Çvetadvīpa, etc.—Vaiçampāyana said: Yudhiṣṭhira and all his brothers became devoted to Nārāyaṇa; Vyāsa visited (through the sky) the ocean of milk (which is always the abode of nectar), and worshipping the great God there, he came back to his own hermitage.—Bhishma said: "I have now repeated the narrative that was recited to Nārada; that narrative has descended from person to person from very ancient times; I heard it from my father."—Sata said: "I have now told you all that Vaiçampāyana recited to Janamejaya. King Janamejaya properly discharged all his duties according to the scriptures. You have all undergone severe penances, etc.; residing in this sacred Naimiṣa forest, ye are . . . conversant with the Vedas, . . . ye have come to this sacrifice of Çaunaka; do ye all adore . . . Nārāyaṇa. I heard this excellent narrative, that has descended from generation to generation, from my father in former times" (XII, 340).—Çaunaka asked about pravṛtti and nivṛtti, etc. Sauti recited the discourse of Vaiçampāyana to Janamejaya. Janamejaya said that the whole world with Brahmān, D., A., and men are deeply attached to acts; Brahmān, etc. (λ), have adopted the religion of pravṛtti. Vaiçampāyana said that this question related to a deep mystery, and that it required penances and acquaintance with the Purāṇas; he recited what M.-r. Vyāsa said to his disciples Sumantu, etc. (μ) (as he used to teach them the four Vedas and Mahābhārata as the fifth), on Meru (inhabited by Si. and Cā.); Nārāyaṇa had been gratified by his penances on the shore of the ocean of milk, and he had, with the eye of knowledge, beheld all that occurred in the beginning of the Kalpa: Mahā-Puruṣa or Paramātmā (according to both Sāṅkhya and Yoga) > Avyakta (Pradhāna) > Aniruddha (māhān ātmā, Ahāṅkāra) > Pitāmaha (i.e. Brahmān); from Ahāṅkāra have sprung the five elements (mahābhūtāni); Marici, etc. (ν), are the eight Prakṛtis, upon whom all the worlds depend; Brahmān created them with the Vedas, Vedāṅgas, etc.; Rudra (from the principle of wrath) > ten Rudras: these eleven Rudras = Vikārapuruṣaḥ . . . Brahmān with the R., Prakṛtis, and D.-r. repaired to the northern shore of the ocean of milk and practised the penances named mahāniyama (declared by Brahmān in the Vedas) for 1,000 celestial years (description); then Hari spoke to them, saying that he would invest them with pravṛtti. They performed a sacrifice in honour of Viṣṇu according to the ordinances laid down for the Kṛta age. The great god was pleased and said that their pravṛtti should be fraught with ends whence there will be return; "Marici, etc. (ξ), the seven R. who are mānasāḥ (spiritual sons of Brahmān) will become the preceptors of the Vedas, wedded to the religion of pravṛtti, and created for procreating offspring (Prajāpatya); . . . Sana, etc. (o), these seven R. who are spiritual (mānasāḥ) sons of Brahmān, and whose knowledge comes to them of itself, are wedded to the religion of nivṛtti, conversant with Yoga and Sāṅkhya, and cause the religion of nivṛtti to flow in the worlds. Kṣhetrajña is myself . . . Brahmān's son Rudra has sprung from his brow at his command . . . In the Kṛta-yuga living creatures should not be slain in the sacrifices; in the Tṛtā-yuga animals, dedicated with mantras, will be slain in the sacrifices; then comes the mixed (miçraḥ) yuga Drāpara; then Tiṣhya with Kali in the van." Vyāsa continued: D. and R. went away. Only Brahmān remained, desirous of beholding the great god, then residing in the form of Aniruddha; the god then showed himself to Brahmān with a vast equine head, etc. (description) saying that at times he would appear in incarnate forms. Then he disappeared, and Brahmān proceeded to his own region. "Do you bow to him who is the lord of the Rudras, etc. (π)." Blessing upon the reader (XII, 341). Janamejaya inquired of the meaning of the different names of Nārāyaṇa; Vaiçampāyana related what Keçava (Kṛṣṇa) had said to Phālguna (Arjuna), when the latter asked him about the signification of his names mentioned by M.-r. in the Vedas and the Purāṇas. Kṛṣṇa said: In the Rigveda, etc. (ρ), many are the names that have been mentioned by M.-r.; "from Nārāyaṇa's [as Aniruddha] grace has arisen Brahmān, and from his wrath has arisen Rudra"; description of Rudra (σ); "I adored in days of yore the ancient Rudra for obtaining the boon of a son; Brahmān, etc. (τ), adore Hari Nārāyaṇa (Viṣṇu)." Etymology of Nārāyaṇa, etc. (v); "R. Tṛita, the eldest (ādyah) son of Brahmān, when thrown into a well by Ekata and Drita, invoked me as Prçṇigarbha and was rescued from the pit; Dirghatamas (§ 170) invoked me as Keçara, became cured of his blindness, and then came to be called Gotama (v. Nil.); Agni and Soma, blending together, became transfused in one and the same substance (ekayonitram āgataḥ) . . . , in the Purāṇa this is said, and further that the gods have Agni for their mouth" (XII, 342). Asked by Arjuna about the unity of nature of Agni and Soma, Kṛṣṇa related this ancient story: I) When only the infinite water (quotation of the ṛuti) exists (called tamas), Brahmān > Puruṣa > Brahmān, who caused Agni (the kṣatra) and Soma (brāhmaṇa, i.e. the brahmans) to spring from his own eyes (quotation of the ṛuti relating to Agni); Agni is the hotṛ and the brahmān of the sacrifice; he who offers food in the mouth of a brahman is said to pour libations into the sacred fire for gratifying the deities (quotation from Çatapatha-brāhmaṇa); in this way brahmans have come to be regarded as Agni. Agni is again Viṣṇu (quoting Sanatkumāra).—II) By Gautama's curse (for his assault on Ahalyā), Indra got a green beard; through the curse of Kauçika, Indra lost his testicles and got those of a ram.—III) As Indra with uplifted thunderbolt would prevent the Açvins from receiving a share in sacrifice (graha-), Cyavana paralysed his arms.—IV) Incensed at the destruction of his sacrifice, Dakṣa by his austerities caused a third eye to appear on the forehead of Rudra.—V) When Rudra would destroy Triputra, Uçanas tore a matted lock from his head and hurled it at Rudra, whence serpents began to bite Rudra, whose throat became blue, just as in the Scāyambhuva Manvantara, when Nārāyaṇa seized Rudra by the throat.—VI) When Angiras Bṛhaspati sat [on the shores of the ocean] to make preparation for the churning in order to raise the amṛta and touched water (upasprçataḥ), the water was not clear (na prasādam gataatyah); he became angry and [cursed] the ocean, saying: "From this day thou shalt be tainted with fishes, etc."—VII) Viçvarūpa Triçiras Tvāṣṭra was the purohita of the gods; he was the sister-son of the Asuras; while publicly offering to the deities he secretly offered shares to the Asuras; the Asuras with Hiranyakaśipu at their head prevailed upon him through his mother, that he (who had come to the Nandana wood) should aid Hiranyakaśipu, who was cursed by Hairanyagarbha Vasishṭha, saying: "Since thou hast chosen another lotr, thy sacrifice shall not be completed, and thou shalt be slain by a hitherto unknown kind of being." Viṣvarūpa performed austere tapas; Indra sent Apaśarasi, of whom Viṣvarūpa became enamoured, and he promised to destroy Indra and the gods; he uttered mantras by which he grew; with one mouth he drank all the soma that was offered to the gods by the brahmins in all the worlds; with one [he ate] food; with one [he drank the energy of all] the gods, including Indra. These repaired to Brahmān (so B.; Brāhmaṇam, C.), and according to his counsel they prevailed upon R. Bhārgava Dadhīca, that he should abandon his body by his yoga power; his bones Dhātṛ shaped into a thunderbolt (vajra), which was pervaded by the energy of Viṣṇu; with this vajra Indra struck Viṣvarūpa, and severed the heads from the body. By the pressing (mathana) of his limbs Vṛtra came into existence, whom Indra slew. Terrified with the double brahmanicide, Indra abandoned the sovereignty of the gods; he entered a cool lotus-stalk in the Mānasa lake, and becoming very minute (anumātraḥ) by his yoga power (aicvarya-yogāt) he entered the fibres of that lotus-stalk. Now rajas and tamas assailed the deities; the mantras of M.-r. lost their efficacy (na prācartanta), Rā. appeared; the Vedas (Brahma) were about to disappear (utsādanam jagāma); without an Indra, the worlds lost their strength and became easy to overwhelm. Then the gods and Rāhis crowned Ayus' son Nahusha as king of the gods. Nahusha ruled over heaven with 500 l-minarics on his forehead, which had the virtue of robbing the energy of every creature. Then follows, somewhat abbreviated, the contents of § 555 (Indra) = V, 11 foll.—VIII) In days of yore, when M.-r. Bharadvāja was saying his prayers (upāsṛjāt) on the shore of the celestial Gaṅgā, he was approached by Viṣṇu, who was taking his three strides; Viṣṇu, struck with water by Bharadvāja on the breast, received a mark [i.e. Ṣṛivatsa] on his breast.—IX) Cursed by M.-r. Bhṛgu, Agni was obliged to become a devourer of all things.—X) Aditi cooked food for the gods to strengthen them so that they might slay the Asuras; there Budha [i.e. the planet Mercury], after completing a vow (vratacarya-), came and asked for alms of Aditi; but she, intending that only the gods should eat it first, gave him no alms. At this Budha (Brahmabhūtaḥ) cursed Aditi, saying that she would have a pain (vyathā) in her womb; in the second birth (as an egg) of Vīrasvat, the egg of [his] mother Aditi [was] killed (so B.); [therefore] Vīrasvat Ṣṛāddhadēva [became] Mārttaṇḍa.—XI) Dakṣa had sixty daughters, of whom he gave thirteen to Kaśyapa, ten to Dharma, ten to Manu, and twenty-seven (the Nakṣatras) to Soma; although the latter were all alike in respect of beauty, etc., yet Soma became more attached to Rohiṇī, and was cursed by Dakṣa, etc., cf. § 615 (Prabhāsa utpattikathana) = IX, 35; Prabhāsa in the western ocean was originally called Hiranyasaras; from this curse also have come the dark spots in the disc of the moon, exhibiting the mark of a hare.—XII) M.-r. Sthūlaśiras practised austerities on the north-eastern side of Meru; a breeze, charged with all delicious perfumes, gratified him; the trees around him [from jealousy] put forth their flowers to make a display; he cursed them, saying that they should not have flowers at all times.—XIII) Nārāyaṇa, in days of yore, for the good of the world, became M.-r. Vaṇavāmukha; practising austerities on Meru, he summoned the ocean; but it did not come; he then, with the heat of his body, evaporated its water and caused it to become as saltish in taste as the human sweat; it should cease to be drinkable; only to Vaṇavāmukha it should be sweet, when he drinks it; therefore, to this day, the water from the ocean is drunk only by Vaṇavāmukha, who lives within it (anuvartina).—XIV) Uṃā, the daughter of the mountain Himavat, was desired in marriage by Rudra; M.-r. Bhṛgu, was refused, and therefore he brought about that Himavat ceased to abound with jewels and gems. Even such is the glory of the brahman. [Almost the whole of the preceding part of this chapter is in prose.]—Etymologies of Uṣhikeṣa, etc. (φ); R. Yaska, having adored me by the name of Ṣṛipivishṭa, succeeded in restoring (abhijagmivān) the Nirukta, which had disappeared into the nether regions (adho nashṭam). Other identifications with Nārāyaṇa (χ); R. Pāñcāla, etc. (ψ), aided by Nārāyaṇa; etymology of Dharmaja, etc. (ω).—Asked by Arjuna about that battle between Rudra and Nārāyaṇa, Kṛṣṇa related: All the universe became suddenly filled with anxiety, etc. (aa); peace was brought about by Brahmān; the mark made by Rudra's lance on Nārāyaṇa's cheek should assume the form of a beautiful whirl, and Rudra should be called Ṣṛikaṇṭha from the mark of Nārāyaṇa's hand on his throat.—The two R. Nara and Nārāyaṇa then made friends with Rudra, and, dismissing the gods, once more set themselves to penances. "In this way, O son of Kuntī! assuming diverse forms do I rove at will through the earth, Brahmaloka, and the high and eternal region of felicity called Goloka. That being, whom, at the time of all thy battles, thou beheldest stalking in thy van, is no other than Rudra; . . . those foes whom thou hast slain, were all, in the first instance, slain by him" (XII, 343). Ṣaunaka asked, why Nārada, having seen the Supreme Lord in the form of Aniruddha, again proceeded so quickly to Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Sauti said: At an interval in his snake-sacrifice, Junamejaya addressed his great-grandfather Vyāsa, asking him this same question, etc. (ββ). Pañcāmpāyana answered: Leaving Ṣvetadvīpa, Nārada quickly proceeded to Meru, full of wonder, thence to Gandhamādāna, and, traversing the sky, to Badarī, where he saw the R. [Nara and Nārāyaṇa], engaged in penances, both with Ṣṛivatsa and matted locks, both with "the swan's foot" on their palms, etc., each of them with four mushkas (v. the note of PCR., p. 822), sixty teeth, and four arms, etc. (description), and told them what he had seen at Ṣvetadvīpa, and that the marks of Nara and Nārāyaṇa were the same that he had seen on the Supreme Soul; "that realm, where he resides, the Sun warms not, etc.; having constructed an altar, measuring eight fingers' breadth, he is practising penances there, standing on one foot, etc.; whatever libations . . . are poured on the sacrificial fire by R., etc. (γγ), all reach the feet of that great deity" (XII, 344). Discourse of Nara and Nārāyaṇa to Nārada about Nārāyaṇa; "Sūrya is said to be the door [through which the emancipate must pass]; entering Sūrya, their bodies are consumed by his fire; they then become invisible . . . ; reduced to invisible atoms they then enter into Nārāyaṇa [who resides in the centre of Sūrya] > Aniruddha > (losing all physical attributes and transformed into mind alone) Pradyumna > Sankarṣaṇa (Jiva) (both those conversant with Sāṅkhya and those that are devoted to the Supreme deity) > Kaśetrājña (= Vasudeva) divested of sattva, rajas, and tamas; . . . thou wert beheld by us in Çvetadevīpa." D.-ṛ. Nārada became entirely devoted to Nārāyaṇa, and dwelt in Badarī for 1,000 celestial years (XII, 345). Vaiṣampāyana related the discourse between Nara and Nārāyaṇa on one side and Nārada on the other about the rites in honour of the Pitṛs. Nārada, the son of Dakṣha, was originally the son of Brahmān, created before all others by a fiat of his will. On one occasion the deities taught their children [the Pitṛs] the çrutis, and, having lost their knowledge, had to acquire it again from those sons (v. the note of PCR., p. 829); the gods and the Pitṛs, placing three piṇḍas on some blades of kuça-grass, worshipped each other. Then Nārada asked why the Pitṛs in days of yore acquired the name of piṇḍas. Nara and Nārāyaṇa said: The earth, in days of yore, disappeared, and was raised up by Govinda (Vṛṣhākapi) in the shape of a gigantic boar; when the hour came for his morning prayers, he, suddenly shaking off three balls of mud from his tusk, placed them upon the earth and dedicated them to his own self, saying that he was resolved to create those that were to be called Pitṛs; seeing that the three balls of mud had fallen towards the south, he declared that those should be known henceforth by the name of Pitṛs. Having then offered those piṇḍas on the Vāraha mountain, worshipping his own self, he disappeared. Therefore those who sacrifice to the Pitṛs, etc., sacrifice, etc., to Viṣṇu himself (XII, 346). Vaiṣampāyana continued: D.-ṛ. Nārada, after 1,000 years, repaired to his own retreat on Himavat, while Nara and Nārāyaṇa remained in Badarī, engaged in austerities; "the ancestors of that person who hates Nārāyaṇa, sink into hell for ever"; glorification of Nārāyaṇa, citing Vyāsa and referring to Harigītā (i.e. Bhagavadgītā); "Vyāsa is Nārāyaṇa on earth; who else could compile such a treatise as the Mahābhārata? Having listened to the diverse kinds of duties and resolved upon a horse-sacrifice, let thy great sacrifice go on."—Sauti continued: Formerly Nārada had recited the discourse about Nārāyaṇa to my preceptor in the hearing of many Ṛ. and the Pāṇḍavas and Kṛṣṇa and Bhīṣma. Sauti's eulogium on Nārāyaṇa (38) (XII, 347). Çaunaka said: "I have heard from thee the glory of the Supreme Soul, etc. (39); the form of Viṣṇu with the equine head, that appeared in the great ocean on the north-east was beheld by Brahmān Parameshthin." Çaunaka then inquired why Harī had appeared, in the form of Aniruddha with the horse-head, to Brahmān. Sauti said he would recite that which Vaiṣampāyana recited to Janamejaya (in the Snake-sacrifice), who put the same question to Vaiṣampāyana. Janamejaya put the question to Vaiṣampāyana. Vaiṣampāyana expounded how the destruction is brought about of all things; then "from the primeval darkness (fraught with immortality) arises Brahmān > Puruṣa = Aniruddha = Pradhāna (divested of sex) = Avyakta = Viṣvaksena Harī, who, yielding to yoga-sleep (nidrāyogaṇ), lays himself down on the waters thinking of the creation; > Ahaṅkāra = Brahmān, etc. = Hiraṇyagarbha, who takes birth within the lotus [that springs] from Aniruddha. Adopting the attribute of sattva (sattvasattva), Brahmān commenced to create the universe. In the primeval lotus two drops of water had been deposited by Nārāyaṇa: one like honey (madhu) which became Madhu made up of tamas; the other hard (kāṣhina) which became Kaiṣabha made up of rajas; these two Asuras (Dānavas), armed with maces, beheld within the lotus Brahmān creating the four Vedas, seized them, and dived to Rasā[-tala] in the north-eastern ocean." Brahmān complained before Īṣāna (ṛṣ); then he hymned Harī (ṛṇ): "my first birth from thee was due to a fiat of thy will; my second birth in days of yore was from thy eyes; my third birth was from thy speech; my fourth birth was from thy ears; my fifth birth was from thy nose; my sixth birth was from an egg; this is my seventh birth, in this lotus." Puruṣa rose from his slumber and assumed an equine head, he who was the abode of the Vedas; the firmament became the crown of his head, etc. (40); then he disappeared and proceeded to Rasā[-tala]; there he set himself to yoga, and adopting a voice according to the çikṣā he began to loudly utter Vedic mantras. The two Asuras, making an appointment with the Vedas as to the time of their return, threw them down to Rasā[-tala] and ran after the sound. Meanwhile Harī took up all the Vedas and gave them to Brahmān; he placed the horse-head in the north-eastern ocean, [which horse-head], moreover, [was] the abode (ālayaṇ) of the Vedas, and thence he was called (babhūva) Açvaçiras ("horse-headed"). Returning to the lotus, Madhu and Kaiṣabha saw him in the form of Aniruddha in yoga-sleep on the water, white, endued with stainless sattva, on the hood of a snake surrounded with a garland of flames. They awakened him and were slain by him; thence he came to be called Madhusūdana. Aided then by Harī and assisted by the Vedas, Brahmān created all the worlds. Then Harī disappeared. Once more, however, he assumed the same form for the sake of the religion of pravṛtti (pravṛttidharmārthan B.; C. ottimḍha). The brahman who frequently (nityaṇ) hears or mentally recites (dhārayita) this story, will never forget his [Vedic or other] lore. Having adored with austere penances the god with the equine head, Ṛ. Pāṇḍava [i.e. Gālava, PCR.] acquired [the science of] Krama proceeding along the path pointed out by the deity [i.e. Rudra, PCR.; cf. XII, 343, 13261-63]. Harī is the receptacle (nidhiḥ) of the Vedas, and of penances, and yoga, etc. (41); ṛta, etc. (42), has Nārāyaṇa for its soul; the Supreme Being is the cause of all this as Puruṣa and as Pradhāna; he is the agent, etc.; the thoughts of all, including Brahmān, etc. (43), are known to Keçava; but none of these can know what his thoughts are, etc.; he is called Vāsudara because of his being the abode of all creatures; he is the eternal highest M.-ṛ., etc.; only the M.-ṛ. that have knowledge for their souls behold the eternal Puruṣa who transcends all attributes (guṇādhikarṇ) (XII, 348). Janamejaya said that the ekāntins [i.e. those who are devoted to Nārāyaṇa with their whole souls] at once attain to the fourth or highest end (i.e. Puruṣottama) without going through the three [i.e. Aniruddha, Pradyumna, and Śaṅkarāṇa; PCR.], and this end is better than that attained to by brahmins studying the Vedas with the Upanishads, etc., and by Yatis; and he asked who first promulgated the religion of Devotion.—Vaiṣampāyana said: When the Pāṇḍava and the Kuru armies were drawn up in array for the battle, and Arjuna became cheerless, Kṛṣṇa himself explained this religion [sc. in the Bhagavadgītā]. Having created this religion in the Kṛta ago, it is borne by Nārāyaṇa himself. Nārada was questioned about it by Arjuna in the midst of Ṛ. and in the presence of Kṛṣṇa and Bhīṣma. My preceptor Vyāsa heard what D.-ṛ. Nārada said, and imparted it to me.—I In that Kalpa, when Brahmān took his birth in (A) the mind of Nārāyaṇa (mānasam janma) and issued from the latter's mouth, Nārāyaṇa himself performed the rites of this religion. From him it passed to Ṛ. Phenapāḥ (froth-drinking)

> Vaikhānasa > Soma; then it disappeared.—II) A: the eyes of Nārāyaṇa (cākṣuṣaṃ janma): Soma > Brahmān > Rudra > R. Vālakhilyāḥ (in the Kṛta age); then it once more disappeared through the illusive power of that god [Nārāyaṇa, PCR.].—III) A: the speech of Nārāyaṇa (vācikaṃ): Nārāyaṇa > R. Suparṇa (who recited it thrice [a day, PCR.])—triḥ parikrāntavān—whence it came to be called Trisauparṇa, referred to in the Rgveda > Vāyu > R. Vighaṣācīnaḥ [i.e. who subsist on remains of sacrifices after feeding guests, etc.], > the ocean (mahodadhīḥ); it once more disappeared and became merged (-samāhītaḥ) into Nārāyaṇa.—IV) A: the ear of Nārāyaṇa (gracanaṇḍa śṛṣṭiḥ): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmān ("... together with the *Āraṇyaka*s") > Manu Svārociṣa > his son Çankhapada > his son Suvarṇābha (diçam palāṇ); when the Tretā yuga came it once more disappeared.—V) A: the nose of Nārāyaṇa (nāsatiye janmani): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmān > Sanatkumāra > Prajāpati Viraṇa (in the beginning of the Kṛta age) > the muni Raibhya > his son Kukṣi (diçam palāya); then it disappeared.—VI) A: an egg [that sprang from Harī, PCR.] (aṇḍajo janmani): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmān > Mu. Barhiṣads > Jyeshtha (a brahman who had mastered the whole Sāmaveda) > king Avikālpana (B. °kampa°); then it disappeared.—VII) A: the lotus that sprang from the navel of Nārāyaṇa (this seventh birth, padmajam): Nārāyaṇa > Brahmān > Dakṣa > his eldest daughter's son Aditya (elder brother of Savitṛ) > Vivasvat > Manu (in the beginning of the Tretā yuga) > his son Ikṣvāku > the whole world; when the universal destruction comes (kṣayaṇte) it will once more return to Nārāyaṇa.—The religion of the Yatis has been narrated to thee in the Harigītā. Nārada got it from Nārāyaṇa himself. Nārāyaṇa is adored (dṛçyate) as of one form (ekavyūhaviḥbhāgaḥ [i.e. as Aniruddha, PCR.]), or of two [do. + Pradyumna], or three [do. + Saṅkarṣaṇa] or four [do. + Vāsudeva].—Janamejaya asked why all persons do not follow the religion of Devotion. Vaiçampāyana pointed to sattva, rajas, and tamas. Harī casts a kind eye upon the person endued with sattva; only Brahmān looks kindly upon him who is overwhelmed with rajas and tamas; D. and R. are given to sattva, but [the deities] not in its subtle form.—Asked by Janamejaya how one may attain to the Supreme Being (Puruṣhotama), and about pravṛtti, Vaiçampāyana said that the Sāṅkhya-Yoga, the Veda and *Āraṇyaka*s (Vedāraṇyakaṃ), and the Pañcarātra are parts of one whole (parasparāṅgāni), and even this is the religion of the Ekāntins, the Sāttvika religion, the Ekāntagati of the Yatis of Çvetadvīpa (v. Çveta, pl.; differently PCR., v. the note, p. 852). Vyāsa imparted this religion to Yudhiṣṭhira (XII, 349).—Janamejaya asked whether the Sāṅkhya, Pañcarātra (B. Pā°), and Vedāraṇyaka are ekaniṣṭha ("preaching the same course of duties," PCR.) or prthanniṣṭha ("preaching courses of duties different from one another," PCR.), and about pravṛtti. M.-r. Vaiçampāyana said: "I bow to M.-r. [Vyāsa] (cf. § 77 = I, 63), the sixth in the series beginning with Pitāmaha (Brahmān), sprung from a portion of Nārāyaṇa, the only son [of his parents], whom Nārāyaṇa in the first ages (ādikāleṣu) created as his son, the unborn and ancient (ajam purāṇam), the great receptacle of the Vedas. Janamejaya said: When Vasishṭha > Çakti > Parāçara > Vyāsa, how can Vyāsa be the son of Nārāyaṇa? Vaiçampāyana said: Vyāsa dwelt for some time on the Himavat; he became tired of his penances owing to the great work of composing the Mahābhārata (Bhārataṃ akhyānam), waited upon by his disciples, Sumantu, etc. (µµ), recapitulating (āvarṭayan) the Vedas, etc. (vv); asked by us, Vyāsa related: This narrative, belonging to the early times (ādikālobdharan), has become known to me through my penances. In the seventh creation, that from the lotus (prajāvisarge vai saptaṃ padmasambhavo), Brahmān being hesitating on account of the difficulty of creating, Nārāyaṇa caused Intelligence (Buddhi) to enter Brahmān, who now created Dui., Dā., G., and Rā., etc.; seeing that many of these would afflict D. and R., Nārāyaṇa resolved upon incarnations (as boar, man-lion, dwarf, man), and upon upholding the earth as a snake in Paṭala. Then uttering the syllable bho, he, from the voice (Sarasvatī) created Sārasvata Apāntaratamas, whom he caused to distribute the Vedas in the [Manu] antara of Manu Svāyambhuva, saying that he should do thus in each Manvantara, and, when Tishya (i.e. Kali-yuga) had set in, he should become the father of the Kauravas, etc., and distribute the Vedas into diverse classes, and be of a dark complexion, born from M.-r. Parāçara in Vasishṭha's (the mind-born son of Brahmān) line by a maiden; he should know the past, the present, and the future; not he, but his son, should be freed from passion (rāga); he should see Kṛṣṇa; Surya's son Çanaicçara [i.e. the planet Saturn] will be a great Manu [read with B. Manu = Manu Sāvarni? during his Manvantara Vyāsa will be one of the seven Rshis]; during that Manvantara thou shalt be the foremost of the class beginning with Manu (Mano-ādi-gaṇa-pūrvakāḥ [i.e. of the Manu, gods, Rshis, etc., in the respective Manvantara])." Vyāsa said: "I am he that was born as Apāntaratamas; I underwent, in days of yore, the austere penances."—Vaiçampāyana said: the preceptors (vaktṛ, veltṛ) of the diverse systems (jñānāni) are: 1) of Sāṅkhya: the great R. Kapila; 2) of Yoga (read yogasya with B.): the primeval (purātanaḥ) Hiranyagarbha; 3) of the Vedas: R. Apāntaratamas, by some called Prācinagarbha; 4) of Pāçupata: Çiva (the son of Brahmān); 5) of Pañcarātra (B. Pā°): Bhagavat [i.e. Nārāyaṇa], and he may be seen in all the systems. The Sāṅkhya, Yoga, and Vedas are eternal; those conversant with the Pañcarātra (B. Pā°) enter Nārāyaṇa; all acts spring from R. Nārāyaṇa (XII, 350).—Janamejaya asked whether there are many Puruṣas or only one, etc. Vaiçampāyana said that in the Sāṅkhya and Yoga many Puruṣas are spoken of; but as the many Puruṣas have only one origin (yonih), so the one Puruṣa is the universe (viçvaṃ) above the qualities (guṇādhiṣṭam), citing the Vedas, etc. (FF), and the old narrative of the discourse between Brahmān and Tryambaka (Çiva), i.e. Brahma-Rudra-saṃvāda (d) (XII, 351-2).

[Nivātakavacayuddhaparvan(°va).] ("Arjuna's combat with the Nivātakavacas," the 39th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.) § 441: One day, when the Pārthas were thinking of Arjuna, they saw Indra's chariot (in which Indra had slain seven phalauxes of Diti's sons), driven by Mātali, illuminating the sky, and Arjuna descended and saluted each of them; Mātali also greeted and instructed them, and then returned in the chariot to Indra. Arjuna then gave to Draupadī precious gems, etc., presented to him by Indra. Then he related all as it had happened, and slept that night with the two sons of Mādri (III, 165). The next morning Indra visited them under the sound of musical instruments, etc., and blessed Yudhiṣṭhira, and advised him to repair to Kāmyaka. Blessing upon the reader (III, 166).—§ 442: When Indra had gone, Arjuna related his journey from Kāmyaka (see §§ 330-3), etc. (of mountains he mentioned only Bhṛgutinga, where he spent one night and subsequently saw the brahman; then Himavat, where the meeting with the Kīrāta took place on the first day of the fifth month after the beginning of his penances; the Kīrāta multiplied a hundredfold and a thousandfold, and was transformed in various manners; Arjuna in vain employed the Vayavya, Sthūnālārṇa (see Nil.), Jala (i.e. Varuṇa, Nil.), and the Çalabhāstra, and showers of shafts and stones, as the Kīrāta swallowed them up all; Arjuna in vain discharged the Brahmāstra (III, 167).—§ 443: Arjuna continued his narrative (see §§ 334-7): he passed the night after the meeting with the Kīrāta at that place, and in the morning he saw again the same brahman (= Indra), and in the evening he had the visit of the Lokapala; the weapons that Indra promised to teach him were: those of Vāyu, Agni, the Vasu, Varuṇa, the Maruṭa, the Sādhyā and Paitāmaha weapons, those of the Gandharvas, Uragas (i.e. Snakes), and Rakshasas, and all the Vaiṣṇava and Nairṛta weapons [v. 12020 foll.]; in the chariot of Indra, Mātali wondered that Arjuna was not jerked, though Indra always himself gets jerked at the first pull by the steeds [v. 12030]; when he had learnt the weapons, Indra said that now even the gods could not conquer him (v. 12054); he had received knowledge of fifteen weapons with five modes of using them, viz. prayoga [discharge], upasaṃhāra [withdrawal], ārṛtti [redischarge], prayaścitta [revival of harmless beings slain by any weapon, PCR., Nil.], and pratighāta [revival of weapons baffled by those of the enemies, PCR., Nil.] (vv. 12058-9); Indra asked him, as his fee, to slay the Nivātakavacas, who were thirty millions (tisraḥ koṭyaḥ) in number and dwelt in the ocean, and gave him the chariot (conducted by Mātali), upon which he (Indra) had vanquished Bali (Baliṃ Vairocanaṃ, v. 12068), Çambara, Bala, Vṛtra, Prahlāda, and Naraka, and millions of Daityas, and "this" diadem, and ornaments like his own, and the impenetrable mail, and fastened "this" durable (ajarām) string to the Gāṇḍīva, and the gods gave him the shell Devadatta, through which Indra had conquered the worlds (cf. § 446) (III, 168).—§ 444: Arjuna continued: When he came to the ocean, he saw at a short distance the Daitya city filled with Dānavas. Mātali drove the chariot with force, and the Dānavas shut the gates. Then Arjuna blew the Devadatta, and the Nivātakavacas appeared with iron javelins, maces, clubs, hatchets, sabres, discs, çataghñis, bhuçuṇḍis, and swords, and sounded dissonant musical instruments. The Devarshis, the Dānavarshis, the Brahmarshis, and the Siddhas came to the battle (III, 169). With arrows inspired with mantras relating to the Brahman-weapon (Brahmāstraparimantritaiḥ), then with the Mādhava (PCR. Māghava) weapon and the Gāṇḍīva Arjuna killed innumerable Nivātakavacas, and the 10,000 horses yoked at the chariot conducted by Mātali trampled upon them (III, 170). Arjuna reduced a shower of crags to powder by the Mahendra weapon, then dried up showers of water by the weapon Viçoshana, that he had acquired from Indra; then he annihilated fire by the water weapon (salilāstra), and by the stone weapon (çailena mahāstreṇa) he repeatedly resisted the wind. Then darkness enveloped the world; the steeds turned away, Mātali fell off, and the golden lash fell from his hand; as Mātali was stupefied, a terrible fear seized Arjuna; Mātali said that he had conducted Indra's chariot in the battle for the sake of nectar, and in the battles with Çambara, Vṛtra, Vairocana, etc., but never had he lost his senses before. Arjuna comforted Mātali and repeatedly frustrated the magic of the enemy, and Mātali again conducted the chariot. Then on a sudden Arjuna did not see the Dānavas, who had become hidden by illusion (māya) (III, 171). Arjuna then fought with invisible weapons. Then they withdrew the illusion and entered their city. The fallen and their weapons covered the ground so that the horses had to proceed in the sky. The Nivātakavacas remaining invisible, covered the welkin with crags; others, entering into the earth, seized the legs of the horses and the wheels of the chariot. Arjuna became distressed, but being advised by Mātali, he applied the thunderbolt, inspiring the Gāṇḍīva with mantras, so that the arrows sent by the thunderbolt, becoming thunderbolts, penetrated the illusions and killed the Nivātakavacas. While the wives of Dānavas were bewailing and at last fled to their palaces, Arjuna and Mātali entered the city, that was superior to that of the gods (to that of Indra, v. 12188). Mātali told him that this was originally the city of Indra, but the gods had been driven away from it by the Nivātakavacas, who had through austerities gratified Pitāmaha and obtained from him the boon, that they might reside here and be free from danger from the gods. When Indra applied to Srayambhā, he was told that he himself in another body should destroy them. As the gods were unable to slay them, Indra had given those weapons to Arjuna, so that he might destroy them. Then Arjuna and Mātali again went to the abode of the gods (III, 172).—§ 445: While returning he beheld a celestial city, moving at will, with trees of gems, etc., with four gates, etc., and Mātali told him it was Hiraṇyapura, made by Brahmān himself for the great Asuras, the Paulomas, and Kālakañjas, as the Daiteya Pulomā and the Mahāsuri Kālaka had by practising austerities for 1,000 celestial years obtained from Srayambhā that their offspring should suffer little misfortune, be incapable of being killed by gods, and obtain an aerial, etc., city, invincible even by the gods, Maharshis, Yakshas, Gandharvas, Pannagas, Asuras, and Rākshasas. Brahmān had destined that Arjuna, a mortal, should kill them. "Therefore destroy them with the thunderbolt." A battle ensued; the Asuras resorted to illusion; the city now entered into the earth, and now it rose upwards, etc. Shot with the iron shafts of Arjuna the city fell down. Then they environed him in 60,000 chariots, etc. Arjuna applied to Rudra, and seeing a man with three heads, nine eyes, etc., he applied the Raudra weapon to the Gāṇḍīva; when it had been hurled, there appeared forms of deer, lions, tigers, Garuḍas, Gandharvas, Yakshas, Asuras, Guhyakas, Nairṛtas, Yātudhānas, etc., by thousands. The Dānavas, some of whom had three heads, some four tusks, etc., were destroyed. Arjuna again worshipped Tripuraghna (i.e. Çiva). Mātali rejoiced and praised Arjuna. The wives of the Dānavas came out of the city bewailing the slain. Mātali took Arjuna to the abode of Indra, and related in detail to Indra Arjuna's achievement, and Indra with the Maruts (v. 12269: the gods) praised him, and said that gods, Dānavas, Rākshasas, Yakshas, Asuras, Gandharvas, birds, and serpents should not be able to resist him in fight, etc. (III, 173).—§ 446: Indra said that on the battlefield Bhishma, Droṇa, Kṛpa, Karṇa, Çakuni, etc., should not amount to $\frac{1}{4}$ part of Arjuna. Then Indra gave him "this" golden garland, the shell Devadatta, etc. (see § 443). Then Indra told him to depart, "and thus after five years I come to you on the summit of this lower range of Gandhamādāna (Gandhamādanapadasya)." Having promised that he should in the next morning show Yudhisṭhira all the celestial weapons, Arjuna passed that night there with all his brothers (III, 174).—§ 447: The next morning, when Arjuna was about to show the celestial weapons to Yudhisṭhira, the earth trembled, etc. The Brahmarshis, Siddhas, Maharshis, Devarshis, gods, Yakshas, Rākshasas, Gandharvas, etc., Pitāmaha, the Lokāpālas, and Mahādeva with his gaṇas appeared; Vāyu threw celestial garlands, sent by the gods, on Arjuna, the Gandharvas chanted ballads, and Apsarasas danced; and sent by the gods Nārada came and prevailed upon Arjuna not to use the celestial weapons without necessity, as they would destroy the three worlds. Then the gods, etc., went whence they had come, and the Pāṇḍavas pleasantly dwelt in that same forest with Kṛṣṇa (III, 175).

[Pañcaçikha-vākya(m)] ("the discourse of Pañcaçikha"). § 668b (Mokshadh.): Bhishma said: The Mithilā king Janaka was always engaged in reflecting upon the courses of conduct that might lead to the attainment of Brāhman. One hundred preceptors always used to live in his palace. Given to the study of the Vedas, he was not very well satisfied with the speculations of his instructors on the character of the soul and their doctrines of extinction upon the dissolution of the body or of rebirth after death. Once the great ascetic Pañcaçikha Kāpileya came to Mithilā, having roamed over the earth. He seemed to have assumed the form of that great R. [and] Prajāpati, whom the Sāṅkhyas call Kapila; they say he was the first disciple of Āsuri [and] long-living. He was performing a mental sacrifice for 1,000 years (cf. Pañcasrotas). He was fully conversant with the Pañcarātra (i.e. "the sacrifice that leads to the state of Viṣṇu", Nil.) and the five sheaths that cover the soul, etc. He had approached one day a large concourse [of R.] following the Sāṅkhya doctrine (Kāpilam), and instructed them about the Unmanifest; Āsuri had inquired of his preceptor (? so Nil. and PCR.) and understood the distinction between the body and the soul, and had acquired celestial vision. For that assembly of R., Āsuri made his exposition of Brāhman. Pañcaçikha became a disciple of Āsuri; he lived on human milk; he was accepted as a son by the brahmanī Kapilā, the wife of Āsuri, and used to suck her breasts. This was said to me by the holy one [i.e. Mārkaṇḍeya or Sanatkumāra, Nil.]. Janaka, abandoning his 100 preceptors, began to follow Kāpileya (i.e. Pañcaçikha) upon the religion of emancipation which is explained in Sāṅkhya treatises. "Some say that, when ignorance is destroyed by knowledge, the destruction of existence itself follows [this opinion also is erroneous].” The king became filled with wonder (XII, 218). Continuation of the discourse between Pañcaṅkha and the king on the topic of existence and non-existence after death. The Mithilā king (Maithilena), beholding his city burning in a conflagration, himself proclaimed (gitam), “in this conflagration nothing of mine is burning.” The king gave up his sorrows, etc. He who reads this discourse attains to emancipation (XII, 219).

[Pañcendropākhyāna(m)] ("episode relating to the five Indras"). § 238 (cf. Vaivāhikap.): Vyāsa said to Drupada: In days of yore, when the gods were celebrating a great sacrifice in the forest of Naimiṣha, Yama, holding the office of çamītr, did not slay the creatures, so that their numbers increased very greatly. Soma, Çakra, Varuṇa, Kubera, the Sādhyas, the Rudras, the Vasus, the Aṣvins, etc., complained thereof to Prajāpati, who comforted them, saying that when the sacrifice was over Yama would again sweep away the inhabitants of the earth. The gods then returned to the place of the sacrifice, and saw a golden lotus carried along the Bhāgīrathī. Indra proceeded to the spot where the Gaṅgā issues, and saw a beautiful woman (it was Çrī), whose tears were being transformed into golden lotuses. She led him to Mahādeva, who as a handsome youth was seated with a young lady on a throne on one of the peaks of the Himavat, playing dice. When Indra spoke haughtily of himself, Mahādeva caused Çrī to paralyse him and lead him into a hole, where four Indras of old were confined in order to be reborn in the world of men, there to slay a large number of men, and then to regain the region of Indra. Their fathers should be Dharma, Vayu, Maghavat, and the Aṣvins, Indra creating a person from himself to be the fifth among them. Their names were Viçvabhuj, Bhūtadhāman, Çibi, Çanti, and Tejasvin. The weeping woman (Çrī) was appointed to be their common wife in the world of men. Nārāyaṇa, to whom Īçāna (i.e. Çiva) and the five Indras repaired, approved of everything. The five Indras were reborn as the Pāṇḍavas, and Çrī as Draupadī. A white hair of Nārāyaṇa's became Bala-deva, and a black Kṛṣṇa, after having entered the wombs of Devakī and Rohiṇī. Having related this to Drupada, Vyāsa granted him celestial sight, so that he beheld the Pāṇḍavas endued with their former bodies.—§ 239: Vyāsa then related to Drupada the story of the damsel (= Çrī = Kṛṣṇā) whom Çankara, i.e. Çiva, appointed to be in a future birth the wife of five husbands (see § 220) (I, 197).

Pāṇḍavapraveṇaparvan ("the section relating to the entrance of the Pāṇḍavas"). § 549: Questioned by Janamejaya, Vaiṣampāyana related: Having obtained boons from Dharma, Yudhiṣṭhira returned to the hermitage and restored to the brahman his araṇi and mantha. Then he asked Arjuna to select some spot where they might dwell undiscovered. Arjuna mentioned some countries surrounding the kingdom of the Kurus (a). Yudhiṣṭhira chose the city of king Virāṭa, who was attached to the Pāṇḍavas. Yudhiṣṭhira would introduce himself as a brahman named Kaṅka, who was skilled in dice and had been the friend of Yudhiṣṭhira (IV, 1). Bhīmasena as a cook and wrestler named Vallava, who had served Yudhiṣṭhira; Arjuna (b-s) as a hermaphrodite, Brhannala by name, who had served Kṛṣṇa as a waiting-maid (IV, 2). Nakula as a keeper of horses, named Granthika, who had formerly been employed by Yudhiṣṭhira; Sahadeva as a cowherd, named Tantripāla; Kṛṣṇa would serve Sudeshā (the queen of Virāṭa) as a sairindhri, skilled in dressing hair, who had waited upon Kṛṣṇa (IV, 3). Yudhiṣṭhira said: "Let our priest, with our charioteers and cooks, repair to the abode of Drupada and there maintain our agnihotra fires, and Indrasena, etc., with the empty chariots proceed to Dvāravātī, and the maid-servants go to the Pāñcālas, together with the charioteers and the cooks. Let all of them say that the Pāṇḍavas had left them at the Dvaitavana lake." Dhaumya advised the Pāṇḍavas as to how they should behave at court and performed the rites ordained in respect of departure, and then set out for the Pāñcālas, taking with him their sacred fires; Indrasena, etc., proceeded to the Yādavas (IV, 4). The Pāṇḍavas then proceeded in the direction of the southern bank of the river Kalindī and passed through the countries of the Yakṣṇomas and the Çarasenas, leaving behind on the right the country of the Pāñcālas and on the left that of the Daçarṇas. Arjuna carried Kṛṣṇa. When they had reached the capital of Virāṭa, Arjuna, as Gaṇḍīva was known to all men, caused them to stow away their weapons in a çamī-tree near a cemetery. Nakula ascended the tree and tied the weapons fast. In the tree they hung up a corpse and said to the inquirers: "This is our mother, aged 180 years." They kept for themselves the names Jaya, Jayanta, Vijaya, Jayatsena, Jayadala (IV, 5). Yudhiṣṭhira praised Durgā (f), who then showed herself to him and promised him victory, etc. (IV, 6). They then entered the city and were successively received by Virāṭa. Yudhiṣṭhira (naming himself Kaṅka Vaiyāghrapadya) was accepted as a courtier (IV, 7). Bhīmasena (naming himself Vallava) was accepted as a cook and a wrestler (IV, 8). Kṛṣṇa was seen by the queen Sudeshā Kaikēyī and accepted as a sairindhri; she said: "My five husbands, who are Gandharvas and sons of a Gandharva king, always protect me" (IV, 9). Sahadeva came clad in a cowherd's dress and speaking the dialect of cowherds, and said that he was a vaiçya named Ariṣṭanemi. He was accepted as the king's head cowherd (IV, 10). Then Arjuna appeared dressed as an eunuch and naming himself Brhannala, and was accepted as a dancing master (IV, 11). Nakula, who named himself Granthika, likewise was accepted as the king's head horsekeeper (IV, 12).

Arjuna).—§ 157 (Pūruvaṃṣ.): I, 95, ††3808 (son of Vyāsa), ††3811 (husband of Kuntī and Mādri), ††3812, ††3813, ††3815 (his five sons), ††3817 (his death).—§ 171 (Vicitravīryasutotpatti): I, 106, 4291 (? his birth from Ambālikā, the widow of Vicitravīrya, by Vyāsa), 4301 (brother of Vidura).—§ 173 (Pāṇḍurājyābhisheka): I, 109, 4353, 4357, 4361 (became king).—§ 176 (Kuntīvivāha): I, 112, 4415 (Bharata-sattamaṃ), 4417, 4419, 4423, 4424 (Kauravanandanah, married Kuntī).—§ 177 (Pāṇḍudigvijaya): I, 113, 4425, 4430, 4442 (married Mādri), 4445, 4449 (Kauravāṇḍṃ yaçobhṛtā), 4452, 4455, 4460, 4461, 4462 (his digvijaya).—§ 178 (cf. Sambhavadhap.): P. then at the command of Dhṛtarāṣṭra offered his wealth to Bhīshma, Satyawati, Kausalyā, Vidura, etc., and with the wealth acquired by him Dhṛtarāṣṭra performed 100 horse sacrifices. With Kuntī and Mādri he became a permanent inhabitant of the woods, addicted to hunting on the southern slope of the Himālaya, supplied with every object of pleasure and enjoyment at the command of Dhṛtarāṣṭra: I, 114, 4470, 4474, 4477.—§ 180 (Gāndhūripūtrotpatti): I, 115, 4484 (his five sons), 4487.—§ 183 (cf. Sambhavadhap.): The muni Kindama inflicted a curse on P., cf. Agastya (b) (I, 118): I, 118, 4562 (rāja), 4563, (4569), (4574), 4591.—§ 184 (do.): P. declared that he would lead the life of a brahmachārin according to the aranyakaśāstras, and send his attendants to Hastinapura to inform Bhīshma, etc. (Dhṛtarāṣṭra wept), and with his wives, protected by mahābhūtas, Siddhas, and paramarshis, he traversed the mountain of Nāgaçata, Caitraratha, Kālakāṣa, Himavat, Gandhamādana, Indradyumnasaras, and Hamsakūṣa; then he practised ascetic austerities on Çataçrīga (I, 119): I, 119, 4593, 4615, (4621), 4629, 4630, 4634, 4636.—§ 185 (do.): P. became dear to the Siddhas, Cçraṇas, and rshis, and like to a brahmarsihi. On the new-moon day when the maharshis assembled in order to partake of a great gathering of gods, rshis, and pitṛs in the abode of Brahmān, P. wanted to accompany them with his wives from Çataçrīga to the north, but they told him that the princesses could not ascend the king of mountains (çailarāja), where they had seen the retreats of gods, Gandharvas, and Apsarasas, and the gardens of Kubera, where only Vāyu and the Siddhas and the paramarshis could go. As he complained of being childless, they told him to let somebody else raise offspring for him. P.'s conversation with Kuntī. P. quoted the words of Manu Svayambhūva (b) and the example of Çaradāṇḍayanti (c) (I, 120): I, 120, 4643, 4645, 4647, (4654), 4665.—§ 186 (do.): Kuntī in reply alleged the Paurāṇic narrative of Vyushitāçva (q.v.) and entreated Pāṇḍu to beget children by his ascetic power (I, 121): I, 121, 4680.—§ 187 (do.): P. said that women formerly were not bound to adhere faithfully to their husband, and were not regarded sinful when yielding to their desire; that practice was applauded by the maharshis, and even now prevailed among birds and beasts and among the Uttara-Kurus. It was the muni Çetaketu (b) who established the now existing practice (§ 188). P. further alleged the example of Madayanti (b) and of Vyāsa: I, 122 (4717).—§ 189 (do.): Kuntī related to Pāṇḍu how she had obtained the mantra from Durvāsa (cf. § 131); P. told her to invoke Dharma (I, 122): I, 122, 4746, (4754).—§ 190 (Pāṇḍavotpatti): I, 123, 4767 (Yudhishtīraḥ . . . P°oh prathamajaḥ sutaḥ), 4768, 4776, 4777, 4782 (Kuntī gave birth by Dharma to Yudhishtīra, by Vāyu to Bhīmasena, by Indra to Arjuna).—§ 191 (do.): I, 123, 4833.—§ 192 (do.): I, 124, 4836, (4842), 4844, 4857, 4859 (by the Açvins Mādri gave birth to Nakula and Sahadeva), 4862 (°oh sutāḥ pañca).—§ 193 (cf. Sambhavadhap.): P. died in accordance with the curse inflicted on him by Kindama (cf. § 183). Kuntī wished to be burnt together with him, but this Mādri did not allow, and herself ascended the funeral pyre (I, 125): I, 125, 4866, 4869, 4877 (Kurunandanah), 4882.—§ 194 (do.): The ascetics took Kuntī, the children, and the two corpses to Hastinapura. Hearing of the arrival of thousands of Cāraṇas (Guhyakas, v. 4930; Siddhas, v. 4931) and munis, people soon after sunrise began to come out from the city to see, together with Bhīshma, Somadatta, Bāhlika, the blind rājarsihi (i.e. Dhṛtarāṣṭra), the kshattr Vidura, Satyavati, Kausalyā, Gāndhārī, accompanied by the other ladies of the royal household (rājadāraḥ), and the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. It was seventeen days after the death of P. (v. 4925). The rshis, etc., suddenly disappeared like a fata morgana (Gandharvanagara) (I, 126): I, 126, 4899, 4901 (°oh putrān), 4903 (°or darāṃç oa putrāṃç ca), 4918 (Kauravyadāyādah), 4923, 4925, 4929 (Kurukulodevahaḥ).—§ 195 (do.): Dhṛtarāṣṭra caused Vidura (in consultation with Bhīshma) to celebrate the funeral ceremonies (pretakāryāṇi) of P. and Mādri on the bank of the Gaṅgā (I, 127): I, 127, 4932, 4933, 4935, 4936, 4937, 4942, 4948.—§ 196 (Vyāsa): I, 128, 4964.—§ 211 (Sambhavadhap.): I, 139, 5535.—§ 213 (Jatugrhap.): I, 141, 5668; 142, 5677, 5679, 5681, 5682; 145, 5744 (Kurunandanah); 150, 5866; 151, 5906 (bhāryaṃ P°oh, i.e. Kuntī).—§ 221 (Caitrarathap.): I, 170, 6500.—§ 235 (Svayamvarap.): I, 191, ††147 (°os tanayāḥ).—§ 237 (Vaivāhikap.): I, 193, ††191 (°r hi rāja Drupadasya rājñah priyaḥ sakha).—§ 241 (Vidurāgamanap.): I, 200, 7387 (°oh putrāḥ); 203, 7441.—§ 243 (do.): I, 206, 7519 (sc. putrāḥ).—§ 244 (Rājyalābhap.): I, 207, 7562 (iva).—§ 267 (Yamasabhāv.): II, 8, 336 (in the palace of Yama).—§ 271 (Lokapālasabhākyānap.): II, 12, 486, 501, 506 (wished that Yudhishtīra should perform the rājasūya, that he might himself ascend to the world of Indra).—§ 289 (Argḥāharanap.): II, 37, 1350 (Bhīshmako . . . He then asked the muni Çamika, but received no answer as the muni was then observing the vow of silence; in anger the king then placed upon the muni's shoulder a dead snake and returned to his capital Hastinapura. Of this the muni's son Çṛṅgin was informed in a quarrel by his companion Kṛṣṇa (I, 40), and then cursed P., saying that within seven nights he should be stung to death by Takṣaka. The muni was not pleased with the curse, as P. properly protected his subjects (I, 41). Therefore he sent his disciple Gauramukha to inform P., who became very repentant and sorrowful. A mansion was erected upon a solitary column and well guarded. The seventh day the brahman Kāçyapa was coming desirous of curing the king. Takṣaka in the shape of an old brahman met with Kāçyapa (I, 42). As Kāçyapa revived a banyan which had been reduced to ashes by being bitten by Takṣaka, Takṣaka gave to Kāçyapa more wealth than what he expected from P., and having ascertained by means of yoga that P.'s span of life was at an end, Kāçyapa retired. Takṣaka went to Hastinapura, and hearing that P. was protected by poison-neutralizing mantras and medicines, he caused some serpents in the guise of ascetics to present the king with kuça-grass, water, and fruits, in one of which he himself was concealed as a tiny ugly insect. As such he appeared when P. was eating the fruit. P. said: "The sun is setting, to-day I have no more fear from poison; therefore let this insect becoming Takṣaka bite me so that the words of the ascetic may be rendered true." Then he placed the insect on his neck and was bitten by Takshaka, who coiled round his neck and uttered a tremendous roar (I, 43): I, 40, 1664 (Kauravamañujah), 1670, 1673 (rāja . . . Abhimanyujah, °rī° also B.); 41, 1692, 1696 (rāja . . . Abhimanyujah), 1709, 1716; 42, 1737, 1762 (nṛpaṃ Kurukulotpannam).—§ 56 (do.): The ministers of Janamejaya told him about P., that he was virtuous, a pupil of Çāradvata (i.e. Kṛpa) in the science of arms and dear to Govinda (i.e. Kṛṣṇa), and that he had got his name because he was born by Uttarā, "parikṣiṇeṣu Kurushu," and that he ruled sixty years; that being addicted to hunting he made over all affairs of state to his ministers; then how he insulted Çamika, and his death (cf. § 51); they also mentioned that Takshaka had insulted the ṛṣhi Uttanka: I, 49, 1934, 1947 (Saubhadraśātmajah); 50, 1980 (rāja Kurucreshthah).—§ 160 (Pūruvaṃc): I, 95, ††3836 (parikṣiṇe kulo jātaḥ), ††3837 (married Mādravati).—§ 617 (Aishikap): X, 16, 724 (parikṣiṇeṣu Kurushu putras tava bharishyati | etad asya P°tvam), 725, 734, 737 (being still a foetus P. was slain by Açvatthāman, but Kṛṣṇa promised to revive him).—§ 785 (Anugītāp): XIV, 66, 1943 (was still-born); 70, 2044 (was revived by Kṛṣṇa; parikṣiṇe kulo yasmād jāto 'yam Abhimanyujah | P°d iti nāmāsyā bhavishyati); 78, 2288 (Abhimanyor yathā jātaḥ).—§ 788 (Āçramavāsap): XV, 21, 591 (Vairātyās tanayam . . . pīṭaram te, i.e. Janamejaya's).—§ 790 (Putradarçanap): XV, 35, 944 (Janamejaya wished to see P., Vyāsa then summoned him from the other world).—§ 791 (Mahāprasthānikap): XVII, 1, 7, 9, 15, 28 (when the Pāṇḍavas left this world P. was installed as king in Hāstina-pura. Kṛpa became his preceptor). [Pativratāmāhātmyaparvan] ("the section about the greatness of the faithful wife") (cf. Pativratāyā māhātmyam Sāvitrīyāḥ). § 545: Asked by Yudhiṣṭhira, Mārkaṇḍeya related, on account of Kṛṣṇa: The Madra king Aṣvapati, the husband of Mālavi, was old and childless. After eighteen years of vows and offerings to Sāvitrī, Sāvitrī granted him a boon; he asked for many sons, but was promised a daughter.

 She was called Sāvitrī. As nobody asked her in marriage, she was sent to look for a husband herself (III, 293). She chose Satyavat, the son of the Čālva king Dyumatsena (the husband of Čaibya), who had been blinded and deprived of his kingdom and lived as an ascetic in the forest. Satyavat equalled Rantideva Sāṅkṛti, Čibi Auṣṇara, Yayāti, etc., but Nārada said: "Within a year of this day he will die"; then Nārada went to heaven (III, 294). After her marriage Sāvitrī dressed in bark garments, etc. (III, 295). She counted the days; and having ascertained that her husband would die on the fourth day following, she observed a trirātra vow; on the fourth day all the ascetics uttered benedictions that she should never suffer widowhood; she would not eat before the sun set. She followed Satyavat as he, taking his axe, set out for the woods (III, 296). He fell ill and slept with his head on her lap.
 Yama himself—and not his emissary—came with a noose in his hand and pulled out of the body of Satyavat a person of the size of a thumb, bound it in the noose and proceeded in a southern direction. Sāvitrī followed him and was granted five boons: (1) that her father-in-law should attain his eyesight and be strong; (2) that her father-in-law should regain his kingdom and never fall off from his duties; (3) that her father should have 100 sons; (4) that she and Satyavat should have 100 sons "begotten from both of us"; (5) that Satyavat should be restored to life and live 400 years. Yama untied the noose; she went back to the corpse and placed his head on her lap. Satyavat regained his consciousness. He was anxious about his parents, and they returned to the hermitage (III, 297). Meanwhile Dyumatsena had regained his sight, but was anxious at not finding Satyavat. He was comforted by the brahmins Suvarcas, Gautama, Bharadvāja, Dālbhya, Apastamba, and Dhaumya. A little while afterwards Satyavat and Sāvitrī reached the hermitage. Sāvitrī narrated everything that had happened and was praised by the ṛshis (III, 298). Meanwhile the enemy of Dyumatsena had been slain by his minister, and Dyumatsena then again became king of the Čālvas. Sāvitrī after a long time gave birth to 100 sons, and her father also got 100 sons by Mālavi. "So also Kṛṣṇa will rescue ye all." Yudhiṣṭhira and his brothers continued to live in the Kamyaka forest (III, 299).

 khyāna).

[Pativratopākhyāna] ("the story of the faithful wife") and [Brāhmanavyādhasamvāda] ("a conversation between a brahman and a hunter") (cf. Pativratāyā ākhyānam). § 479 (Mārkaṇḍ.): Questioned by Yudhiṣṭhira about the virtue of women, Mārkaṇḍeya, saying that the work of a mother is more difficult than that of a father, and that for women neither sacrifices nor ṣraddhas nor fasts are of any efficacy, but that they can win heaven only by serving their husbands (III, 205), related: When the brahman Kauṣika, who had studied the Vedas and the Upanishads, was reciting the Vedas under a tree, a female crane befouled his body, and looked upon with anger by Kauṣika fell to the ground. Kauṣika regretted his angry deed. When he had entered a village in order to procure alms, in a certain house the wife first served her husband, who came home tired and hungry, with food, etc. (description), and then began to conciliate the angry Kauṣika, who blamed her for exalting her husband above the brahmins. She said that she was no she-crane, that she knew that the ocean had been made brackish and undrinkable by the wrath of the brahmins, that the fire of their wrath had not to this day been extinguished in the forest of Daṇḍaka, but that she regarded her husband as her supreme god, and deserved forgiveness, that anger is a foe to men within themselves, and that the gods know him to be a brahman who has abandoned anger and passion, etc., and who, though himself injured, never returns the injury, etc., that virtue (dharma) is difficult to understand, but must be based on truth; the ancients have declared that virtue depends on ṣruti, but it is variously defined (bahudhā dr̥ṣyate) and subtle to be understood (sūkṣhma); "thou art cognisant of virtue and studieth the Vedas; but I think, however, that thou dost not know what virtue really is; a fowler (vyādha) in Mithilā will discourse to thee on virtue." Kauṣika blessed her, and returned to his abode, reproaching himself (III, 206).—§ 480: He set out for Mithilā (description), ruled over by Janaka, and found out the fowler, who was seated in a butcher's yard, selling venison and buffalo meat to a large crowd of buyers; but he at once went to Kauṣika, and proving that he knew why he had come, he led him to his abode, where he honoured him duly, and explained to him that, notwithstanding his cruel trade, which he had inherited from his sires and grandsires, and which belonged to his caste by birth, he led a virtuous life, serving his superiors and old people, speaking truth, never envying others, giving to the best of his power, etc. In the kingdom of Janaka there did not exist a single subject that did not follow the duties of his caste. He did not slay the bours and buffaloes himself, nor did he eat meat himself; he fasted during the day and ate in the night; "even though the behaviour of his order be bad, a person may yet be himself of good behaviour; so also a person may become virtuous, although he may by profession be a slayer of animals." It is the fault of the kings when the subjects decay, and monsters, dwarfs, etc., are produced, but Janaka ruled justly. If one repents a wrong done by him, he is delivered from his sin (v. 13751). If a man seeks redemption (kalyāṇam abhipadyate) after having committed a sin, he becomes purified of all his sins (v. 13756). It is temptation (lobha) that constitutes the basis of sin. Then he gave some advice as to what is virtuous conduct (v. 13794 foll.: "these three are said to constitute the perfect way (padam) of the virtuous: a man must not do wrong to anybody, he must give alms, and must always be truthful"); (v. 13797 foll.: "freedom from malice, forbearance, peace of mind, contentment, pleasant speech, renunciation of desires and anger, virtuous conduct, and actions regulated according to the ordinances of the sacred texts, constitute the perfect way (mārgam) of the virtuous") (III, 207). The fowler and the animals slain by him are driven by their karman in a former life. In days of yore 2,000 animals and 2,000 cows used to be killed every day in the kitchen of king Rantideva; at the caturmāsya animals are sacrificed; the ṣruti says, "The fires are fond of meat" (v. 13812), and at the sacrifices animals are killed by the regenerate, and these animals are purged of sin, and by mantras go to heaven. Regarding animal food this rule has been laid down by munis: Whoever partakes of animal food after having first offered it duly and respectfully (yathavidhi yathācārādham) to the gods and the Pitṛs, is not polluted by the act. The ṣruti says, "Such a man is not one who partakes of animal food," and a brahman who has intercourse with his wife during her season is a brahma-cārin. King Saudāsa, under the influence of a curse, ate human flesh. Agriculture is considered to be praiseworthy, though the plough destroys many creatures. Seeds of rice, etc., are all living creatures. As to hunting and the cutting of trees and herbs, many creatures live in trees and fruits and water. The earth and the air are all swarming with living organisms, which are unconsciously destroyed by men from mere ignorance (III, 208). When life is at stake and in the matter of marriage, it is justified to tell an untruth. Whichever conduces most to the good of all creatures is considered to be truth (satyam) (v. 13845; cf. v. 13990). The fowler discoursed upon the influence of karman upon metempsychosis and salvation (moksha; Brahmaṇaḥ padam, v. 13895) (III, 209).—§ 481: Questioned by Kauçika about the senses, the fowler discoursed about the sinful (in thought, word, and action (v. 13906); the evolution of sin is this: First manas is bent on vijñāna; thence successively originate kāma, rosha, karman, rāga, dvesha, lobha, moha, vyāja, adharma, pāpa). The virtuous man discerns these evils by means of his spiritual insight (v. 13908).—§ 482: Then he shortly enumerated the elements of the brāhmī vidyā (the universe, consisting of the five great elements, space, wind, fire, water, and earth, is Brāhman [neuter]; their qualities: sound, touch, form, flavour, and taste; manas, buddhi, ahan-kāra; the five senses, ātman, rajas, sattva, tamas; the last seventeen are "rāçir avyaktasūññakāḥ", in all (with the objects of senses and the manifest and the unmanifest) twenty-four (caturvīmçaka ity eka vyaktavyaktamayo guṇaḥ) [read gaṇaḥ, cf. Hopkins, Great Epic, p. 34] (III, 210).—§ 483: A somewhat more detailed explanation of the five elements and their qualities. The terms vyakta and avyakta (v. 13931). Salvation, etc., are dependent on self-discipline (tapas), that is impossible without subduing the senses. The body is like a chariot, the coachman being the soul, and the horses the six senses (III, 211).—§ 484: The three qualities sattva, rajas, and tamas (III, 212).—§ 485: The five vital airs (prāṇa, samāna, apāna, udāna, vyāna), that are all seated (pratiṣṭhitāḥ, v. 13973) in the navel, and by whose collision the internal fire is generated that digests the food. The arteries (nāḍyaḥ), issuing from the heart in all directions, carry the essence of food (annarasān) acted upon by the ten prāṇas. The perception of the internal spirit, purification of the heart, destroys the good and evil effects of actions and leads to eternal beatitude. That state of peace and purification of heart (prasādasya, v. 13984) is likened to the state of a person who in a cheerful state of mind (triptaḥ) sleeps soundly (sukham), or to a lamp shining on a windless spot, well kindled. Community with Brāhman cannot be taught to us even by the guru (v. 13992) (III, 213).—§ 486: Saying "Thou shalt see by what means I have attained to this blissful state", the fowler introduced Kauçika to his parents, whom he honoured together with his wife and children like gods (description; v. 14025: "I do what is agreeable to them, even though it be not strictly justifiable") (III, 214).—The fowler said: "Thou hast wronged thy father and thy mother, for thou hast left home without their permission, for the purpose of learning the Vedas, and they have become blind from grief at thy loss. Thereby thy ascetic merit, etc., have become useless to thee. Do return home this very day." Kauçika acknowledged that the fowler had rescued him when he was on the point of falling into hell, and that he did not consider him to be a çūdra, as it was very difficult for a çūdra to learn the eternal religion (dharmaḥ); his being a çūdra must surely be due to any action in a former birth; this Kauçika wished to learn.—§ 487: The fowler told: "I was formerly a brahman, son of an eminent brahman, and versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas, and friend of a king, who was accomplished in the Dhanurveda, and thence skilled in archery myself; one day, when I accompanied the king on a hunting expedition, I killed a rehi, whom I took for a deer, and was cursed by him to be born as a fowler in the çūdra caste (III, 215); but I prevailed upon him to grant me that I should remain a pious man and honour my parents, and thereby attain great perfection (siddhim), remember my past life, and again become a brahman. I took the rehi to the hermitage, and he did not die."—Kauçika saluted him respectfully, and having returned home he honoured his old parents (III, 216).

[Pavana-çālmali-samvāda(h)] ("the discourse between the Wind-god and the çālmali-tree"). § 654b (Āpaddh.): Bhīṣma said: There was a lordly çālmali-tree on the Himavat. One day Nārada praised it, saying that Pavana must be its friend and protector, since he spared it, though he eradicates the tallest and strongest trees (XII, 154). The çālmali said that the Wind was not its friend, but that it was stronger itself than the Wind. Nārada warned him, saying that the Wind was stronger than even Indra, etc. (a) (XII, 155). Informed by Nārada, the Wind came and rebuked the çālmali-tree, saying that he had spared it because Brahman, while creating the world, had for a time rested under it. The çālmali laughed and challenged the Wind to show his power, which the Wind threatened to do next day. When night came the çālmali reflected that all that it had said to Nārada was false, that it was in reality weaker than other trees, and inferior in might to the Wind; "but in intelligence no tree is my equal" (XII, 156). The çālmali then caused all its branches to be cut off. The Wind smiled; the çālmali felt great shame, and, remembering the words of Nārada, repented greatly of his folly.

Wind and Arjuna Kārtavīrya"). § 772b (Ānuṣāsanik.): Bhishma said: The Haiḥaya king Arjuna Kārtavīrya, with 1,000 arms, became the lord of the whole of this world (i.e. the earth) [residing] in Mahishmati; he gave large gifts to Dattatraya, who granted him four boons: that he should have 1,000 arms in battle, but only two at home; that he should subjugate the whole earth righteously, and sway her with vigilance; and that whenever he might happen to go wrong, the righteous should set him right. A. now regarded himself as having no equal. A celestial voice said that the brahman is superior to the kshatriya; A. maintained that the brahmins take refuge with the kshatriyas; what the virgin Gayatri had said from the sky was not true (asatyam, so B. and Nil.). "I shall bring the skin-clad brahmins under my subjection." At these words of A. the invisible goddess (Gayatri) became agitated (vitrasā 'bhan nīdācari'; cf. Nil.). Then Vāyu (wind) warned A., addressing him from the air. Asked by A. what kind of earthly creature the brahman is, if he resembles the wind, water, fire, sun, or sky (XIII, 153), Vāyu praised the brahmins above all, citing Kaśyapa (o), Āngiras (d), Gautama (e), [Kapila] (f), Aurva (g), and Dattatraya; even Agni (h) and Brahman (i) are brahmins; the large kingdom of the Danḍakas was destroyed by a brahman; the ocean, that was full of crystal water, cursed by the brahmins, became saline in taste. Arjuna remained silent (XIII, 154). Vāyu repeated the story of Kaśyapa in detail, and asked Arjuna if he knew a kshatriya superior to Kaśyapa. Arjuna remained silent. Then Vāyu related the story of Uthya (j) (XIII, 155). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu then described the greatness of Agastya (k). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related a feat of Vasishṭha's (l) (XIII, 156). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related a feat of Atri's (m). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related a feat of Cyavana's (n) (XIII, 157). Arjuna remained silent. Vāyu related the history of the Kapas (p). Arjuna praised the brahmins, mentioning Dattatraya. Vāyu told him always to protect them; "a terrible danger threatens thee from the *Bhṛgu*s; that will take place after a time" (XIII, 158).

Here the gods with Indra and the Prajāpatis performed sacrifices. Here king Gaya Amārtarāyasa satisfied Indra with soma in seven horse-sacrifices, where all the articles, which else are made of wood or earth, were of gold. Seven sets of these articles were prepared by him, and at the top of each sacrificial stake seven rings were fastened; the gods themselves with Indra erected the sacrificial stakes. Indra became delighted with soma and the brahmins with the dakṣiṇā, which were innumerable as the sand-grains, the stars, or the raindrops. Gaya presented the brahmins with golden cows (otherwise PCR.) made by Viṣvakarman, so numerous were his caityas that but little space was left on the earth. Prabhāsotpattikathana(m) ("on the origin of Prabhāsa"). § 615 (Baladevat.): Dakṣa had twenty-seven daughters, married to Soma, connected with the several constellations serving to help men in calculating time, all beautiful; Rohiṇi, however, was the foremost in beauty. As Soma lived long with Rohiṇi, his other wives complained to Dakṣa, who got them reconciled. As Soma, however, still continued to live with Rohiṇi exclusively, his other wives once more approached Dakṣa, who now threatened to curse him. His threats were not, however, heeded, and when the wives complained a third time, Dakṣa cursed Soma, so that he was affected with phthisis. His sacrifices, etc., were in vain; the herbs became tasteless and failed to grow, etc. The gods prevailed upon Dakṣa to withdraw the curse on condition that Soma should behave equally towards all his wives, and bathe in the tīrtha (sc. Prabhāsa) where the Sarasvatī mingles with the ocean, and adore Mahādeva there; then he should during the one half of the month wane every day and during the other wax every day. Bathing there on the day of new moon, he was restored. Dakṣa told Soma not to disregard women and brahmanas. Prabhāsa became the foremost of all tīrthas; Soma bathes there on every recurring day of the new moon and regains his form and beauty; thence comes its name Prabhāsa, because Soma there regained his effulgence (prabhā).

Prajāgarā, an Apsaras. § 336 (Indralokābhigamanap.): III, 43a, 1785 (in the palace of Indra).

[Prajāgaraparvan(°va)] ("section relating to the sleeplessness of Dhṛtarāṣṭra," the 59th of the minor parvas of Mbh.; cf. Prajāgara). § 557: Dhṛtarāṣṭra, after Sañjaya had left him, requested Vidura to tell him what may be good for a person that is sleepless and burning. Vidura said that Yudhiṣṭhira was worthy of being the sovereign over the three worlds, while the qualities of Dhṛtarāṣṭra were the very reverse of those; Dhṛtarāṣṭra had no right to a share in the kingdom owing to his being blind; Vidura blamed him for having bestowed on Duryodhana, Çakuni, Karna, and Duḥçāsana the management of the empire. Then he explained the marks of a wise man and of a fool, quoting Byhaspati's answer to Indra, and alluding to the conversation between Sudhanvan and Asurendra [i.e. Prahāda] in relation to the son of the latter (V, 33). Continuation of Vidura's discourse (V, 34).—§ 558: Vidura said that as long as a man's good deeds are spoken of in this world, so long he is glorified in heaven, and cited the old story about the conversation between Vīrocana (q.v.) and Sudhanvan, both suitors for Kecini's hand. "Entrusting the cares of thy kingdom to Duryodhana, Çakuni, the foolish Duḥçāsana, and to Karna, how canst thou hope for prosperity? Possessed of every virtue, the Pāṇḍavas depend on thee as their father; oh, confide thou in them as thy sons" (V, 35).—§ 559: Vidura related the old history of the discourse between Ātreya and the Sādhyas, who received instruction from Ātreya when he was wandering as a beggar ("... One should not return the slanders or reproaches of others, for the pain that is felt by him who suffers silently, consumes the slanderer; and he that endures, succeeds also in appropriating the virtues of the slanderer—the slanderer's merits become his... The very gods desire company of that man who, when abused, does not himself return the abuse nor cause others to return it, or who, when beaten, does not himself return the blow nor cause others to do it, and who wishes not the slightest injury to him that injures him..."). Then he explained what are those families that are called high ("... let none in our race serve a king as minister") (V, 36). Vidura spoke of the seven and ten kinds of foolish men according to Manu Svāyam-bhuva; of the reasons why not all men attain the allotted period of life (100 years according to the Veda), etc. But Dhṛtarāṣṭra could not abandon his son (V, 37-40).

§ 603 (Nārāyaṇāstramokṣhap.): VII, 202^{ca}, 9630.—§ 660^b (Bhṛṅgu-Bharadvājasamv.): XII, 184, 6844 (°at prāṇiyate prāṇi), 189, 6965.—§ 660^c (do.): The wind or breath called Prāṇa residing within the head, and the heat that is there, cause all kinds of exertion. That Prāṇa is the living creature, the universal soul, the eternal Being, and the Mind, Intellect, and Consciousness of all living creatures, etc. Thus the living being is, in every respect, caused by Prāṇa to move about and exert . . . That heat, residing between Apāna and Prāṇa, in the region of the navel, operates, with the aid of those two breaths, in digesting all food that is taken by a living creature. There is a duct beginning from the mouth down to the anal canal. Its extremity is called the anus. From this main duct (śrotas) numerous subsidiary ones branch out in the bodies of all living creatures. In consequence of the rush of the several breaths (Prāṇa, Samāna, etc.) those breaths mingle together. The heat (agnih) [that dwells in Prāṇa, PCR.] is called Uṣman. It is this heat that causes digestion . . . The breath called Prāṇa, the bearer of a current of heat, descends [from the head, PCR.] downwards to the extremity of the anal canal and thence is pushed upwards again. Coming back to its seat in the head it once more sends back the heat it bears. Below the navel is the region of digested matter, and above it that for the food not yet digested. The navel is the depository of all the forces of life, which sustain the body. Urged by the ten kinds of breaths the ducts (nāḍyaḥ), branching out from the heart, convey the liquid juices that food yields upwards, downwards, and in transverse directions. The main duct leading from the mouth to the anus is the path by which yogins succeed in attaining to Brāhman by holding the soul within the brain. Even thus heat is planted in the breaths called Prāṇa and Apāna of all embodied creatures. That heat is always burning there like fire in any vessel: XII, 185, 6868, 6870, 6878, 6882.—§ 662^b (Jāpakop.): XII, 200^{ca}, 7346.—§ 667 (Mokṣadh.): XII, 213, 7758.—§ 668 (Pañcāṅkikha-v.): XII, 219, 7939 (prāṇāpāna).—§ 677 (Mokṣadh.): XII, 240, 8740 (do.). 253, 9091 (do.).—§ 695^b (Dakṣhayañjāvināca): XII, 285, 10337 (do.).—§ 704 (Mokṣadh.): XII, 302, 11124.—§ 714^g (Samāna): XII, 329, 12397 (son of Apāna), 12398, 12399.—§ 782^b (Brāhmanagītā): XIV, 20^a, 612, 613, 614; 21, 646, 647, 653; 23, 685, 687, (691), 692, 693, 694, 696, 697, 699, 705 (the contention of the vital breaths about superiority); 24, 712, 716, 719, 722; 25, 742; 28, 789.—§ 782^g (Guruśiṣyasamv.): XIV, 42, 1109.

Pratiñāparvan(°va) ("the section including the vow of Arjuna," the 74th of the minor parvas of Mbhr.).—§ 10 (Parvas.): I, 2, 339.—§ 596: In the evening, when Arjuna, having slain large numbers of Samçaptakas, proceeded towards his tent, he said to Kṛṣṇa that his heart was affrighted; he noticed indications of disaster; Abhimanyu did not come out with smiles to receive him, etc. He remembered that Drona had this day formed the circular army, which none save Abhimanyu could break, but he had not taught him how to come out of it, after having pierced it; he had heard the leonine shouts of the Dhārtarāshṭras, and Kṛṣṇa had heard Yuyutsu censuring them for having slain a child instead of Arjuna, and then Yuyutsu had thrown away his weapons afflicted with rage and grief. Kṛṣṇa consoled Arjuna, referring to the kshatriya duties and heaven. None save Kṛṣṇa and Yudhishtira (who were always acceptable to him) could address Arjuna. Yudhishtira, addressing him, told (VII, 72) him the particulars of Abhimanyu's heroism and fall. Arjuna vowed to slay Jayadratha before the setting of the morrow's sun (his oath); even as to A., D., men, birds, snakes, P., wanderers of the night, B.-r., D.-r., etc., he said that they would not succeed in protecting him, even if he entered Rasātala, or ascended the firmament, or repaired to the city of the gods (Devapuram) or the city of Diti (Ditish puram); if the sun set before he had slain him, he would himself accept the pyre. Arjuna bent the Gāṇḍīva, Kṛṣṇa blew the Pāñcājanya, Arjuna the Devadatta (VII, 73). Having been informed by spies, Jayadratha was overwhelmed with sorrow and fear, thinking that not even Drona, etc. (a), not even D., G., A., U., Rā., can protect him against Arjuna; he wished to return home. Duryodhana comforted him, saying that he, Karṇa, etc. (β), would protect him. Jayadratha, accompanied by Duryodhana, repaired that very night to Drona and questioned him about the difference between himself and Arjuna. Drona said they had got the same instruction, but Arjuna was superior to Jayadratha in consequence of yoga and the hard life led by Arjuna; Drona would, however, protect him, forming an impenetrable array; and, moreover, death ought not to be an object of terror to him (VII, 74). Kṛṣṇa remonstrated with Arjuna for his rash vow; the Kurus had expected an attack by Arjuna; now they will protect Jayadratha (who had mentioned Arjuna's encounter with Çiva, Hiranyapura, etc.); Karṇa, etc. (γ) would be in Jayadratha's van; Drona's army would be half a çakata and half a lotus with a needle-mouthed array in the middle (VII, 75). Arjuna assured Kṛṣṇa of his competence to accomplish his vow, notwithstanding Drona, Sā., R., V., A., M., with Indra, V.-D., D., P., G., Garuḍa, etc., by the means of Gāṇḍīva and the weapons he had obtained from Yama, etc. (δ), and the Brāhma weapon (VII, 76). The gods with Indra became very anxious. Sinister omens appeared in nature. Kṛṣṇa went to Arjuna's abode and comforted Subhadra (with the kshatriya duties, etc., and revenge) (VII, 77). Subhadra lamented over Abhimanyu, and said "lie on Bhīmasena, etc." (ε), because they had not protected him. Draupadī and Uttarā came to her, lamenting. Kṛṣṇa said that Abhimanyu had obtained the most laudable and enviable goal. Then he returned to Arjuna (VII, 78). Arjuna performed his usual nightly sacrifice to Çiva. Kṛṣṇa with Dāruka repaired to his own tent. None in the Pāṇḍava camp slept that night, thinking of Arjuna. In the middle of the night Kṛṣṇa said to Dāruka that he had resolved to fight to-morrow [if necessary]; he should equip his chariot, placing on it Kaumodaki, etc., making room for Garuḍa, and yoking thereto Balāhaka, etc. (ζ); when hearing Pāñcājanya emitting the shrill Rishabha note, he should come to Kṛṣṇa (VII, 79). Arjuna in a dream saw Kṛṣṇa, who told him not to grieve, and mentioned the Pācupata weapon (with which Çiva slew all the Dāityas in battle); if he remembered it now, he would be able to slay Jayadratha to-morrow; otherwise he should pray to Çiva. At the Brāhma hour, Arjuna saw himself sojourning through the sky (Himavat); Mañimat, frequented by Si and Ca, etc. (7) with Kṛṣṇa, to where Çiva was seated with Pārvatī (description) (8); Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna hymned Mahādeva (VII, 80). Arjuna saw that the offerings he had made every night to Kṛṣṇa had come to Çiva, and he mentally worshipped both Kṛṣṇa and Çiva. Çiva then told Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna where to fetch his bow and arrow from a lake of amṛta. In the lake they saw two terrible snakes; when they had uttered the Brahma Çatarudriya, the snakes assumed the forms of a bow and arrow. From Çiva's body there came out a brahmācārin of blue throat and red locks, and having showed Arjuna the use of the bow and arrow, and the mantras, he sped these weapons to that same lake. Having thus once more obtained the Pācuputa weapon, Arjuna with Kṛṣṇa came back to their own camp (VII, 81).—§ 597: THE FOURTEENTH DAY. Yudhishtira underwent his morning rites (very copious description); Kṛṣṇa visited Yudhishtira (VII, 82). Then also Virda, etc., came (a). Yudhishtira asked Kṛṣṇa to rescue the Pāṇḍavas, quoting Nārada. Kṛṣṇa assured Yudhishtira of Arjuna's success (VII, 83). Arjuna came and acquainted Yudhishtira of his dream. Then he and Kṛṣṇa and Yuyudhāna (these two in one chariot) set out to Arjuna's pavilion. Kṛṣṇa equipped Arjuna's chariot (which had previously been sanctified by mantras), which Arjuna circumambulated, bow and arrows in hand. Arjuna, Yuyudhāna, and Kṛṣṇa mounted the chariot. Many auspicious omens appeared. Arjuna charged Yuyudhāna to protect Yudhishtira in his absence (only he or Pradyumna is able to do it). Yuyudhāna proceeded to Yudhishtira (VII, 84).

Prayāga, a tīrtha at the confluence of the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā. § 61 (Sarpasattra): I, 55, 2097 (there Soma, Varuṇa, and Prajāpati had performed sacrifices).—§ 373 (cf. Tīrthayātrāp.): At P., whose praise has been sung by ṛshis, the gods dwell with Brahman at their head, further the quarters with their presiding deities (sadigīṣvarāḥ), the Lokapālas, the Sādhyas, the Pitṛs, the great ṛshis (para-marshayaḥ) Sanatsumāra, etc., the stainless Brahmarshis, Aṅgiras, etc., the Nāgas, the Suparṇas, the Siddhas, the cakracaras (i.e. the Sun, etc., Nil., cf. BR., "Snakes," PCR.), the rivers, the seas, the Gandharvas, the Apsarasas, and Havi with Prajāpati. There are three fire caverns (agnikunḍāni) between which the Gaṅgā, that foremost of tīrthas, rolls rapidly. There the world-purifying daughter of the Sun (Tapanasya) Yamunā unites with the Gaṅgā. The country between the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā is regarded as the mons Veneris (jaghanam) of the Earth, and the ṛshis regard P. as its genitals (upastham). P. with Pratishthāna, Kambala, and Aavatara and the tīrtha Bhogavati constitute the altar (vedīḥ) of Prajāpati. There the Vedas and the sacrifices in their embodied forms and the ṛshis adore Prajāpati; there the gods and rulers of territories (cakradharāḥ) perform their sacrifices; therefore P. is the most sacred in the three worlds and the foremost of all tīrthas. By going thither, by praising it, etc., one is cleansed from sin, etc., and he who bathes there obtains the merit of a rājasūya and an aśramedha. "Let not the words of the Vedas nor the words of men dissuade thy mind from the desire of dying at P." There are 600,010,000 tīrthas at P. By only bathing there one acquires the merits of the four kinds of knowledge (cāturvidyā, i.e. the three Vedas and the ātmavidyā, Nil.) and of the truthful (satyaoddishu): III, 85, 8212, 8218, 8219 (sa-Pratishthānam), 8222, 8226 (°maragam).—§ 375 (Tīrthayātrāp.): III, 85, 8231.—§ 377 (Dhaumyatīrthak.): III, 87, 8315 (Gaṅgā-Yamunayor vīra saṅgamaṁ lokaviçrutam |

Pr̥thu Vainya (C. sometimes Vainya), a mythical king. § 11 (Parvasaṅg.): I, 2, 466 (^oor Vainyasya yatrotkam ākhyānam paramarṣiṇā (i.e. Mārkuṇḍeya); in the third book of Mbhr., however, the narrative alluded to is not found).—§ 296 (Dyūtap.): II, 53, 1929 (Vainyāḥ).—§ 574 (Jambūkh.): VI, 9^a, 314 (Vainyasya).—§ 595 (Shoḍaçarāj.): King Pr̥thu Vainya in his rājasūya was installed by M.-r. as emperor (sāmraṭ); (etymology of Pr̥thu, kshatriya, and rājan). During his time the earth yielded crops in sufficiency, etc.; the kuça blades were all of gold, etc.; when king P. went to the sea, the waves became solid; the very mountains used to open before him that he might pass through them. Once the trees, the mountains, the gods, the Asuras, the men, the Urugas, the seven ṛshis, the Yakshas, the Apsarasas, and the Pitṛs came to P. and calling him their emperor (samrāt), etc., asked boons from him. Taking his Ājagava bow, P. caused them to milk the Earth (whom he made his daughter) by means of a calf (A), a milker (B), and vessels (C) for various kinds of milk (D): (1) [the trees]: the çāla-tree (A), the fig-tree (plakṣhaḥ) (B), a vessel of udumbara wood (C), torn buds (chinnapraroḥaṇam) (D). (2) [The mountains]: the eastern hill (Udayaḥ parvataḥ) (A), Meru (B), a stone (açmamayaṇam) vessel (C), gems and herbs (D). (3) [The gods]: a god (Indra?) (B), things capable of bestowing strength (D). (4) The Asuras: Virocana (A), Devimardhan (B), an unbaked pot (C), wine (mudyaṇam) (D). (5) Men: Manu Svāyambhuva (A), Pr̥thu (B), cultivation and crops (D). (6) The serpents: Takṣaka (A), Dhṛtarāṣṭra (B), a gourd (C), poison (D). (7) The seven ṛshis: Soma (A), Bṛhaspati (B), ohandas (C), the Vedas (D). (8) The Yakshas: *Vṛshadhva*ja (A), Vaiçravaṇa (i.e. Kubera) (B), an unbaked pot (C), the power of disappearing at will (antardhānam) (D). (9) The Gandharvas and the Apsarasas: Citraratha (A), Viçvaruci (B), a lotus (C), perfumes (D). (10) The Pitṛs: Yama Vaivasvata (A), Antaka (B), silver vessels (C), svadhā (D). "To this day the creatures exist in the same way." P. caused golden images to be made of every article on earth and bestowed them all on the brahmins at his great horse-sacrifice, also 66,000 elephants of gold; also the whole world (VII, 69): VII, 69, 2394 (Vainyaṇam), 2395, 2396 (Vainyaṇam), 2406 (Vainyaḥ), 2408, 2414, 2421 (Vainyaḥ).—§ 632^b (Shoḍaçarāj., cf. § 595): XII, 29, 1030 (Vainyaṇam), 1031, 1032 (Vainyaṇam, repetition from § 595).—§ 641^f (cf. Vena). When P. had sprung from the right hand of Vena, the M.-r., R., and the gods told him to observe righteousness and punish the wicked, etc. Çukra became his priest, the Vālakhilyas his counsellors, the Sarasvatas his companions (Sarasvatyo gaṇas tathā), the M.-r. Garga became his astrologer (samvatsaraḥ); Sata and Māgadha (who came into existence before P.) became his panegyrists, he gave to Sata the land lying on the sea-coast (Anūpadacāṇam), to Māgadha Magadha. P. made the earth even (in every manvantara the earth becomes uneven), removing the rocks lying around with the horn of his bow; by this means the hills and the mountains became enlarged. Then Vishṇu, etc. (8) crowned P. and gave him rich gifts; steeds, chariots, etc., came into existence as soon as P. thought of them.

At this time there was neither decrepitude nor famine, etc., nobody had any fear from reptiles and thieves, etc.; when he proceeded to the sea, the waters used to be solidified, the mountains granted him passage, etc. He drew from the earth as a milker from a cow seventeen kinds of crops for the Y., Rā., and N., etc. He caused all creatures to regard righteousness as the foremost of all things; he was called rājan (etymology) and kshatriya (etymology), etymology of the name Pṛthivī. Vishṇu confirmed his power and entered his body in consequence of his penances; for this reason the entire universe bows to the king as to a god. At this time a gold lotus was born from Vishṇu's brow, from that lotus was born the goddess Śrī, who became the spouse of Dharma ("righteousness"); their son was Artha ("profit"); all the three were established in sovereignty. The king is really a portion of Vishṇu on earth. § 153 : Samvarana (q.v.).

§ 155 : Among the grandsons (B, sons) of Dhrtarāshtra three became famous: Pratipa, Dharmanetra, and Sunetra.—Pratipa had three sons: Devāpi, Čāntanu, and Bāhlika. Devāpi adopted an ascetic life; Čāntanu and Bāhlika became kings.—There were many other kings like to the Devārhis, in the race of Bhurata and Manu, who adorned the Aila dynasty (1, 94).

§ 156 : Janamejaya wished to hear the same more in full, commencing from Manu.

Ilina (~ Rathantari).

§ 157 : Vicitravīrya died without leaving a child. Then Satyavati began to think how the dynasty of Dushyanta might be perpetuated, and she recollected the ṛshi Draupāyana and prevailed upon him to beget three children for Vicitravīrya: Dhrtarāshtra, Paṇḍu, Vidura.—In consequence of a boon granted by Draupāyana, Dhrtarāshtra had 100 sons by Gāndhārī, of whom the most celebrated were Duryodhana, Duḥçāsana, Vikarna, and Citrasena.—Paṇḍu had two wives: Kuntī or Pṛthā, and Mādri. One day, when hunting, he with his arrow pierced a ṛshi cohabiting with [his wife in the shape of] a deer. The ṛshi cursed him, saying that he should also die when in such a state. Paṇḍu then prevailed upon Kuntī to raise offspring for him, and by Dharma she had Yudhiṣṭhira, by Maruta (i.e. the Wind) Bhīmasena, and by Çakra (i.e. Indra) Arjuna. He then caused her to impart on Mādri the vidyā (i.e. the mantra of invocation), and Mādri by the Açvins had Nakula and Sahadeva. One day when Paṇḍu, filled with desire, touched Mādri, he immediately died, and Mādri ascended the funeral pyre with him, after having recommended her twins to Kuntī. Then the Paṇḍavas with Kuntī were taken by the ascetics to Hastinapura and introduced to Bhīshma and Vidura, whereafter the ascetics disappeared from sight, while flames poured down upon the earth and the drums of the gods were heard. They then performed the obsequial rites for their father. As they were being brought up there Duryodhana became exceedingly jealous of them.—§ 158 : Brief mention of Duryodhana's efforts against the Paṇḍavas; how they are sent by Dhrtarāshtra to Varāṇasī to be burnt in a lac-house, but are rescued by Vidura; killing of Hiçimba; they go to Akacakra; kill the Rakshasa Baka; go to Pāṇḍala-nagara, obtain Draupadī, and return home.—§ 159 : The eleven sons of the Paṇḍavas: (1) Prativindhya (son of Yudhiṣṭhira); (2) Sutasoma (of Vykodara, i.e. Bhīmasena); (3) Çrutakirti (of Arjuna); (4) Çatanika (of Nakula);
